In the wake of the Industrial Revolution of the early 1900s, bungalows became the favorite new architecture of the Arts & Crafts Movement that glorified all things handcrafted. At Preservation Homes, we set out to flatter, and even improve, the intent of that movement by relating its goals to new bungalow-style homes to fit the needs of today’s families. Preservation Homes’ bungalow designs are the result of extensive research and design. Like the charming originals, our creativity and diversity of materials are what make our homes so wildly popular with area homebuyers. All of our homes feature Hardiplank siding, and some include cedar-shake shingles, brick and even stone. Each one offers Frank Lloyd Wright Prairie School Design windows, “rocking chair deep” front porches, custom-made tapered porch columns, authentic Bungalow Brand color schemes, and heavy landscaping. Our plans also have modern considerations, such as spacious state-of-the-art kitchens, luxury baths, and sensible room dimensions, yet they retain the charm and practicality of the homes built almost a century ago. For more information about our homes, call 919-832-7740, visit Banbury Park inside the beltline in West Raleigh, or stop by one of our furnished homes in Bedford at Falls River in North Raleigh, Bungalow Park in Apex, or Magnolia at Scotts Mill in Apex.

DAVIS PARK
Live Life in the Park
EAT, DRINK AND BE MERRY

Food is the music of love around here lately. Classy and innovative new restaurants seem to appear weekly, concomitant with a quantum leap in appreciation for wine and sophisticated mixed drinks. The region from the Triangle to the coast has achieved cosmopolitan critical mass and Metro is here to keep you posted.

In our annual food and wine report, Gourmet editor Moreton Neal recognizes the hottest new restaurants and takes a look at the top chefs who seem to appreciate our diverse new palate. And wine editor Barbara Ensrud can't get over the wine choices in area establishments and the proliferation of vineyards now dotting the state. A superb state of affairs you will agree.

March madness is here. Diane Lea suggests a trip this spring just north of the border to experience Virginia's historic Halifax County, featuring beautiful homes, the stately Berry Hill plantation and the renovated Prizery cultural center in South Boston. Art Taylor announces a slew of new books and signings in New & Noteworthy, and fashion guru Molly Fulghum-Heintz sneaks a look ahead at the colors and styles for spring.

Carroll Leggett remembers when people felt “tolerable”; Louis St. Lewis wants to know why artists are often the victims; Jim Leutze frets about the feds short-changing coastal projects; and Philip Van Vleck uncovers a homegrown musical group with a story to tell.

Spring also means balloting begins for our annual MetroBravo! Awards, recognizing the best of just about everything in the region. Use the ballots in this issue or go to www.metronc.com and vote for your favorites.

Break out the Bermudas and clean out the cooler... Spring is coming to Metro.

NEW ORLEANS PARKS AND DIX DECISION

Having recently relocated to Raleigh from New Orleans, I appreciated the article about the Dix Hill opportunity for the community and what it could mean for the future. My experience in New Orleans would support all efforts under consideration to preserve the land as a potential site for a park. I grew up in a city blessed with two urban parks maintained by state, city and private funds. Both Audubon Park and City Park serve as welcome refuges for families, a place of natural beauty and serenity nestled in the midst of a busy city. As a newcomer and parent of a young son, it is exciting to think that my son could have the joy of this park in his new hometown just as I had as growing up in the Crescent City. I offer my hearty encouragement to all who have the civic vision to preserve the land as a park for future generations.

DIX HILL MEMORIES

In reference to the article on Dix Hill in the February 2006 Metro Magazine, I have many ties to Dorothea Dix Hospital, now in line for either major changes or pristine ideas like gardens and parks, leaving as is the buildings and grounds. The latter is the best way to go. I say this as I feel I was a carrier for the Depression and pre-war years from 1931 to 1936. I was particularly impressed and pleased when Dr. Assad Meymandi offered $1 million to help enhance the property with gardens and parks. I could envision Paris' Bois de Boulogne or New York City's Central Park here in Raleigh.

I go back so far that I remember the great fire of 1925 when patients were herded into hand-held circles surrounded by Dix Hill attendants and nurses, plus many volunteers. And in the late afternoon, I saw them pass my house loaded into furniture vans and transfer trucks and taken to nearby Central Prison for security until repairs could be made to the dormitories. I was five but remember it vividly. Our neighbor, who had one of the few cars in the neighborhood, took my father and me over to the campus. I saw one entire roof that ran all the way along the main building burn and slide off. Then in later years I learned that Fleet Williams, a News & Observer reporter, competent but unkempt, found himself in the middle of one of those circles and had a very difficult time talking his way out!

To add to my experience with Dix Hill as a carrier for the paper from age 11 to at least 16, I met and got to know many of the patients and attendants, plus a handsome boy of my age, a normal offspring of two patients working in the laundry. He was adopted at birth by a Miss Boylan Heights only two blocks away from the gate to the campus. My neighbors and I were over there portions of every week playing football, sledding during the six or seven snows a year back then—ah, global warming! So I am one of the many Raleigh and North Carolina natives who want to keep the buildings and campus the way it was. I was particularly impressed and pleased when Dr. Assad Meymandi offered $1 million to help enhance the property with gardens and parks. I could envision Paris' Bois de Boulogne or New York City’s Central Park here in Raleigh.
Travis, the head of all nurses at Dix Hill and grew into adulthood here in Raleigh. I heard later that he had become a worker on an oilrig in the Gulf of Mexico.

My carrier route covered the entire campus, building to building. It took nearly two hours to cover the entire route, counting the time spent talking to patients and attendants and eating a minimum of two breakfasts. The most fascinating breakfast stop was the farm operation. Also here were the most content and productive patients. It was a multi-acre farm with many cattle, mules and other animals, plus vegetable gardens that provided food for the campus. The milk cows and the willing, faithful patients were as complaisant as the land.

I have to mention one middle-aged patient at the farm. I gave him papers when I had an extra, and he showed his friendship and thanks by giving me an aeronautical device with a wooden body and large wings perfectly balanced on needle points! To me it was the work of a genius; you could spin it around while it was resting on the points of the needles. He accomplished this complicated engineering feat from old crates of soft wood.

I gave away so many papers that I ended up owing the News & Observer money. I mentioned this to my dear friend Mel Finch, former comptroller of the newspaper, saying that I would pay the paper the money owed. He said that he would accept it if I would pay the interest due after nearly 70 years!

There was another genius resident very important to me at Dix Hill—John F. Curfman (1824-1880), the first engineer hired at Dix Hill. This Maryland native was hired sometime in or near 1856, the year the hospital opened. He made many innovative contributions to the campus, including steam heat and using resin for fuel in various operations. He was assigned the large wheelhouse still standing near the farm buildings and barns, possibly after his marriage to a local girl named Mary Shaw. One of their children was my grandmother Mary Lemon (Mollie) Curfman Campbell.

SOCIETY URGES BOTANICAL GARDEN AT DIX HILL

I applaud Metro Magazine and all of you for researching, writing, photographing and printing the February 2006 cover article by Diane Lea titled, "Preserve Or Develop? The Dix Hill Controversy." Your article helps residents of...
Raleigh and North Carolina understand some of the great history of the publicly owned Dorothea Dix Hospital facilities and the public proceedings over the remaining 300 acre site in downtown Raleigh.

Unfortunately Lea did not cover all the pertinent information concerning what the prospects are for the publicly owned Dix Hill site. Lea grossly overlooked, in her research and article, the hard work being put forward by people with the Wake County Botanical Garden Society (WCBGS) to show reason to establish a World Class Botanical Garden on the entire remaining Dorothea Dix Hospital site. She assigned all the work being done to establish a conceptual vision for that valuable public site to a singular group called Friends of Dorothea Dix Park and one individual named Greg Poole Jr. In fact, the Wake County Botanical Garden Society has been working with Wake County and Raleigh officials since 1995 to secure enough land to establish a World Class Botanical Garden. As soon as we discovered the publicly owned Dix site was going to be reassigned for use after 2007, we began to work to secure the site as a Botanical Garden.

We have been in discussions with all State, Local, and Consultant officials that are involved with the Dix transaction. WCBGS was the first independent organization to bring forth a separate conceptual plan to the Dorothea Dix Legislative Study Commission, the Governor, other members of the Council of State, Raleigh Mayor & Council, Wake County Commissioners, Wake County School Board and all the smaller Municipalities within Wake County. This WCBGS comprehensive and detailed 34 page Dorothea Dix Botanical Garden study and plan was officially presented to all members of the Dorothea Dix Hospital Property Study Commission and to consultant Bradley W. Davis with LandDesign of Charlotte on Friday, May 13, 2005.

This same BG study and plan has been broadly distributed to all involved Government Officials, some in the media and other interested parties across North Carolina. Bradley Davis with LandDesign officially reported that a Botanical Garden was the most frequently mentioned feature requested for the Dorothea Dix site by all public respondents involved in the public hearing/comment periods he conducted. WCBGS representatives were the first to call for a legis­lated, protected overlay district for the remaining 300 acre Dix site in a Dorothea Dix

There is much more information that your article about the Dix public proceeding and results that your article failed to report or overlooked in your research that needs to be added.

I propose to Metro Magazine and your readers that first you read the 34-page Dorothea Dix Botanical Garden Proposal Report & Economic/Social Impact Study to bring you up to date on the Dix public property proceedings. Second, I suggest Diane Lea and Metro Magazine research further and write an additional article about the public plan for a World Class Botanical Garden that is in the review stage by State Government officials for the Dix site.

Thank you for your time and consideration of our public work concerning a Botanical Garden at Dix. I look forward to working with you to properly inform the public concerning this valuable public project.

Note: WCBGS is an independent group effort separate from the other involved groups vying for land use plan approval by State Government officials concerning Dix. For more information call 919-772-6761 or contact Willie D. Pilkington, spokesperson Wake County Botanical Garden Society Raleigh.

I suspect you’ve been contacted about this a zillion times, but I’ll send it anyway: A breath-of-fresh-air report from the CATO Institute on the absurdities of current mass transit spending patterns—particularly light rail: “A Desire Named Streetcar.”

WILMINGTON PORT: YOU DO THE MATH

As a former student of Dr. Jim Leutze’s at UNC-Chapel Hill, I can personally testify as to his considerable teaching skills. In fact, he was so good that even I received two As in his military history classes, and I did not get many of those in my four years there. However, Dr. Leutze’s mathematical skills are not quite so profound. In his February column debating the merits of the new Wilmington port, Dr. Leutze notes that “The dock would be 4,000 ft. long—for Panthers’ fans, that’s 40 football fields.” Actually, that would be about 13 football fields because the length of a football field is 100 yards, not 100 feet.

Don’t sweat it, Jim. I still think you should have been appointed chancellor at Carolina before any of those other guys. And you’re still the best teacher I ever had there. Just don’t go back for your math Ph.D. Stick with history instead.

RESPONSE FROM JIM LEUTZE

Dear Peter:

Thanks for demonstrating your careful reading of my recent piece. It is always gratifying for teachers to find that their students are smarter than they are (sometimes we even take credit for having contributed to that outcome). There is one point that I would like to make in my defense: Your math is better than mine, but you are not quite as adept at hyperbole. If you are trying to say something is BIG, does 40 football fields sound better than 13?

Cheers,

Jim

Halifax, VA, Historic Homes Tour
To Follow Old Stagecoach Route

The annual Halifax Historic Homes Tour, to be presented in southern Virginia April 29 & 30 by the Halifax Woman’s Club, will feature 19th-century plantation homes and a former tobacco factory located on what was the main stagecoach route between New York and New Orleans in the early 18th century. In addition, the tour will include historic homes in the Mountain Road Historic District, located in the county seat of Halifax. Known as the prettiest little village in Virginia, it is a state Historic District recognized by the VA Historic Landmarks Commission and the National Register of Historic Places.

On April 10, 1865, at this 16-foot banquet table in the dining room of Springfield mansion, Jefferson Davis and his cabinet held the last official meeting of the Confederate States of America.

During the 18th century, River Road was part of the main stage route between New York and New Orleans and the principal road from Halifax County Courthouse to Danville, VA. It was the most heavily traveled road in the County. In the early part of the 19th century, the rich soil along the Dan River produced a wealth of tobacco, which was the main export crop from America to Europe. As fortunes rose, large plantations and mansions, showplaces of style and elegance equal to any in Virginia, began to appear along the road. Several of these homes will be visited on the tour. Scenes from two are pictured herewith.

Springfield, one of the River Road mansions on the tour, was built in 1799 in the Greek Revival style with fluted Ionic columns. Remodeled in the mid-1840s by Jeffersonian architect and builder Dabney TAROVER, built by Thomas Davenport in 1770, was burned and rebuilt in the 1850s for Thomas Bruce, son of James Coles Bruce for whom Berry Hill, the nearby Greek Revival mansion, was built. Tarover shares many similarities with Berry Hill, including an almost identical floor plan. It now belongs to Henry and Virginia Zenke of Greensboro, NC.

Minor Cosby, the exterior is of brick made and burned on site; window and doorsills are of stone quarried from nearby Sandy Creek; and exterior woodwork is locust, which was sunk and seasoned in the Dan River for three years to prevent warping.

Thomas Day, well-known furniture maker of nearby Milton, NC, whose work has been exhibited in the NC Museum of History, created many of the home's architectural features including his signature “S” curve on the newel post in the entryway.
four unique mantelpieces and double front doors that he carved in a style known as "chamfering."

Tickets for the Halifax Historic Homes Tour are $15 per person. For tickets or information, visit www.oldhalifax.com/Halifax-WomansClub or call Club members Kay Lewis at 434-572-1641, Dot Clements at 434-476-6801 or Betty Yates 434-793-9003. Ticket holders will receive a complimentary tour of Berry Hill Plantation guided by members of the Halifax Woman's Club.

Many of the homes on the tour are filled with interesting period furniture.

To learn more about historic Halifax County, see Diane Lea's design feature in this issue, featuring Berry Hill Plantation, Dunn Hill Farm and the restored Prizery, an architecturally significant South Boston warehouse.

Gala Fundraiser Planned For State Capitol Building

The Capitol Rotunda in the historic NC State Capitol Building, Raleigh, will be the site for a fundraising gala on April 1 sponsored by the State Capitol Foundation Inc. The event will include a silent auction and dinner featuring North Carolina-grown foods and wine, dancing and music from Leon Jordan and the Continentals.

The Foundation, a non-profit organization created to support educational components and restoration projects for the Capitol Building, is committed to raising $1 million to establish an endowment to fund these efforts. The Gala will contribute to the achievement of this goal.

"More than 100,000 people visited the Capitol building last year, [including] 53,000 school children from all 100 North Carolina counties," said Barbara Boney, President of the Foundation board. "As this is often the first introduction to how a democracy worked in the early years of the Republic and a very important component of fourth-grade education throughout the state, we are committed to maintaining educational support so North Carolina students can learn first hand about the history of the State Capitol."

"The best azalea I've ever planted!"
To purchase tickets for the gala ($150 per person), call 919-786-0109 or visit www.ncstatecapitol.org.

Full Frame Film Festival Announces April Highlights

The Full Frame Documentary Film Festival welcomes filmmakers and fans to Durham April 6-9. The nine-year-old international festival takes an inside look at “Class in America,” exploring the memory of Hurricane Katrina through the first documentary shots taken in the wake of the storm.

Sketches of Frank Gehry, Sydney Pollack’s intimate look into the life and work of the legendary architect, is the opening night film. Shot with a hand-held video camera, it is the Academy Award winning director’s first documentary film.

This year’s Career Award honors Richard Leacock and his work. Leacock was a cameraman in World War II and co-founded the Direct Cinema movement. For schedules and additional information, visit www.fullframfest.org.

Wilmington's Cameron Art Museum is built on the grounds where the final fight to take over the city of Wilmington during the Civil War was played out at the “Battle of Forks Road” (Feb. 20, 1865). The soldiers’ breastwork mounds still stand and recently a group of volunteers (shown here) cleared out overgrown brush and unearthed sections of squared, heart-pine logs, possibly used as firesteps by the troops. Last weekend, on the 141st anniversary of this skirmish, the Museum sponsored a Civil War Living History Weekend. The Cameron Museum is located at the corner of South 17th Street and Independence Boulevard in Wilmington. For information, visit online at www.cameronartmuseum.com or call 910-395-5999.

The Beaufort Wine and Food Weekend, destined to become one of the most enjoyable benefit events in North Carolina, came about by accident, patched together in just eight weeks last year by Don and Tracy Holloway to benefit the Friends of the North Carolina Maritime Museum. When Don, formerly a wine merchant, and Tracy, manager of her family’s Front Street Grill at Stillwater, discovered that Wilmington had canceled its food and wine festival at the last minute, they decided to accommodate the scheduled West Coast vintners by holding a smaller occasion in their own hometown. The weekend was a hit beyond all expectations. The happy westerners, besotted with the beauty of Beaufort, its friendly people and first-class food, were planning their return by the festival’s closing day.

Keying off the success of last year’s event, the Second Wine and Food Weekend will take place April 26-29. With almost a year of planning by chairman Michael Carithers, the festival promises three days of fun celebrating the bounty of Beaufort’s terrific restaurant scene. Besides Beaufort’s finest, guest chefs include Raleigh’s John Toler, Ashley Christensen and Walter Royal; Leonard Logan from Duck and Shawn Wellsdick from Wilmington. Special guest will be “the father of California wine country cuisine,” author and restaurateur John Ash.

Some of the greatest vintners in the world will showcase their wines in four days of dinners and lunches topped off with a gala reception. There’s plenty to do between meals—from art exhibits and jazz concerts to seminars and bottle signings. Following the festival last year, I reported that, “I was blown away by the quality of wines there—some of the best I’ve ever tasted.” And Metro’s Wine expert Barbara Ensrud commented about this year’s offerings, saying, “Looks like there will be some good pours to go with food from some of NC’s top chefs. Nice to see North Carolina wineries such as Childress and Rag Apple Lassie on the scene.”

Proceeds from the weekend will benefit the Beaufort Historical Association as well as the North Carolina Maritime Museum. Check out the website: www.beaufortwineandfood.com or call 252-646-5230 for information and tickets. Don’t miss this opportunity to eat, drink and be merry for a good cause.

Halifax County, Virginia:
SHORT DRIVE TO HISTORY AND ARCHITECTURE
—JUST NORTH OF THE BORDER

South Central Piedmont Virginia’s historic Halifax County, which borders North Carolina’s Person, Caswell and Rockingham Counties, is a landscape of rolling farmsteads and picturesque small towns. Established in 1752 and named for the Second Earl of Halifax, George Montagu, Halifax County early on became a wealthy agricultural region. For many years prior to the Civil War it was one of the largest tobacco growing counties in the country. After the Civil War, tobacco farming and tobacco manufacturing continued to fuel a thriving economy, particularly in South Boston, the largest town. The development of a technique for flue-curing tobacco made the leaf pliable and easier to process and ship just as the country was acquiring a taste for bagged and granulated tobacco. In 1868, Upton Thomas Bowden, an itinerant tinner, is said to have set up shop in South Boston to manufacture and sell his Bowden Flues. Bowden later moved to Oxford, NC, and in 1872 received a patent for an elaborate system of flues using dampers to control heat and pans to induce steam during the curing process.

Another bit of local history, perhaps viewed as heresy by North Carolinians, credits Halifax County farmer John L. Wade with manufacturing the first bagged granulated smoking tobacco. Wade made and sold his product, “Bull Doze,” in a small building at the corner of Main Street and Wilborn Avenue in South Boston. When Wade sold the business, the new owner moved it to the bustling tobacco manufacturing town of Durham, NC. The rest, as they say, is history.
The UO-acre Dunn Hill Farm, a former tobacco farm with a 1840s house and a complement of outbuildings, is located just across the border from North Carolina, in Southside, Virginia. The home’s west wing, added sometime after the Civil War, now serves as Wileman’s library.

From such promising beginnings, the tobacco industry in South Boston and Halifax County continued to flourish in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, expanding into warehousing and pressing (pressing tobacco leaves layer by layer into hogsheads for shipping) and growing and shipping as much as 90 percent of the world’s tobacco seed. By 1907 South Boston had become the second largest bright leaf tobacco market in the country, selling 13 million pounds that year. In 1927, 20 million pounds were traded. Even the Depression could not slow the economic engine of tobacco. From 1935 to 1941, South Boston, a town of about 5,600, hosted tens of thousands of people at their annual American Tobacco Festival.

So how does a rural Southside Virginia county, whose major product has been in decline since the 1960s, revitalize and become the destination for new residents and generate new businesses and industries? The answer is in the stories of three very different architectural restoration projects.

RALPH WILEMAN
The first story is Ralph Wileman, Professor Emeritus of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, who searched for several years for a wonderful historic house to restore as a retirement project. In 1991, Chapel Hill friend Betsy Hayes told him of a local dentist’s plans to tear down an old house on a farm he had purchased in Vernon Hill, VA. Wileman contacted the doctor and prevailed upon him to let him see the house before he demolished it. “Well, the house was quite deteriorated and the walls were black because it had been used as a smokehouse,” says Wileman. But despite cautionary comments by his children and friends, Wileman, a former president of the Chapel Hill Preservation Society, bought the 140-acre property and began the restoration of Dunn Hill Farm. Constructed around 1840, the simple vernacular farmhouse was two rooms up and two rooms down. The window surrounds and much of the window glass were still intact, as were the mantels and woodwork. Wileman found a local contractor, Tom Giglio, who worked with him to restore the original portion of the house and add a new rear ell that accommodates a kitchen and dining area with a fireplace and a master suite.
Wileman, an artist and collector, furnished Dunn Hill with his eclectic blend of collectibles and personal memorabilia and exercised considerable skill and ingenuity in designing and executing needlepoint panels for the risers on one side of the double staircase. “The house grew, like most old houses do,” says Wileman, “which is why you have two parlors with two separate front doors and two staircases that meet at the top on the second floor.”

As Wileman settled into the life of a modern-day country squire, he indulged his love of history by exploring the region and reading the lore of old Virginia. Always a fan of George Washington’s Mount Vernon, Wileman asked Chapel Hill muralist Michael Brown to cover his bedroom walls with scenes of Mount Vernon, the lovely Virginia countryside, and a mythical farm community with a one-room school house. Dunn Hill Farm is also depicted as it is in real life, a pleasant country house situated behind two towering magnolias.

As such projects often do, the renovation of Dunn Hill Farm became a labor of love. Soon Wileman and Giglio were at work building terraces, putting in a pool and constructing a guest house of salvaged materials, such as tier poles from the farm’s 150-year-old tobacco barns and pine floors salvaged from torn down houses. The cottage’s kitchen cabinets are crafted from recycled heart pine tongue and groove wood treated with tongue oil and brier wax. The guesthouse provides bedrooms for Wileman’s frequent visitors, and a good part of the oversized second floor is devoted to his art studio.

As an active community volunteer, Wileman drew upon his second career designing product logos and marketing tools for IBM to create an exhibit about South Boston’s tobacco heritage in The Prizery, the newly restored and adapted tobacco warehouse in downtown South Boston. But then his creativity took an unexpected turn. While preparing work for Berry Hill plantation, considered one of the finest Greek Revival homes in the country, is the second story, located 13 miles from Dunn Hill Farm and about three miles from Downtown South Boston. James Coles Bruce, an 1825 graduate of the University of North Carolina, and his wife Elizabeth Douglas Wilkins built it in 1842. A National Historic Landmark and the centerpiece of a 750-acre resort complex, Berry Hill’s transformation from a vacant historic house bound for the auction block to a showcase of architecture and design has been accomplished by two separate and enterprising owners.

display in The Prizery’s art gallery, Wileman made up a form he calls Corner Art. Constructed of wood in corner shapes, often with cutouts embellished with fabric-covered spindles and other intriguing elements, Wileman’s Corner Art is characterized by gorgeous color combinations and exotic patterns. On a recent visit to Istanbul, Wileman caught sight of an antique Russian carpet. The elaborate curvilinear pattern of the rug has found its way into one of his most striking pieces.

native and ardent preservationist and AXA executive Richard Jenrette. The restoration included the addition of a colonnaded wing with a formal dining area and modern kitchen. The wing parallels the original service wing where Darby's Tavern now offers pub dining and music. Another AXA addition, the tasteful 90-room guest house, features accommodations furnished with Italian custom-carved four-poster beds with mattresses of French hen's down, small balconies, and even complimentary Starbucks coffee. AXA also added an indoor pool pavilion, a delightful space with trussed ceiling and floor to ceiling windows overlooking portions of the 26-acre stone wall that encompasses the original Berry Hill compound. Berry Hill was purchased from AXA in 2004 by three young Washington, DC, developers. Berry Hill Plantation Resort is now the consummate full-service resort, equipped with high-speed wireless Internet access and a multitude of recreational opportunities, including tennis, hiking and biking trails, lawn games, volleyball, concerts and cooking classes, with golf and horseback riding available nearby. But the focus of Berry Hill is its incomparable architecture and history, extending back in time to the land grant from the English Crown to William Byrd II of 105,000 acres, and following the course of the Carrington and Bruce families whose descendants owned Berry Hill for almost 200 years.

Kay Thompson, Sales Manager, and Suzanne Candy of Strategic Marketing Services, make Berry Hill’s story human and accessible by emphasizing how James Coles Bruce and his beloved wife Eliza were devoted students of Greek and Roman ideals and architecture and paid the attention to the details they lavished upon the house during its construction. “It took two years to build Berry Hill,” says Thompson, “and it was built to last. The white-washed brick walls are three feet thick and the 60-foot-wide granite stairs, which rise from the front drive to the Doric columned portico, were quarried from stone on the plan-
This masterpiece of Classical Orders is attributed to a design by John E. Johnson and to the work of master builder Josiah Dabbs. A second builder, Dabney Cosby, builder of Old East on the University of North Carolina campus in Chapel Hill, also worked at Berry Hill. Of particular architectural note is the horseshoe shaped mahogany staircase that seems to float above the grand entrance hall, an engineering feat of spectacular visual impact, said to be the work of Thomas Day, a free Black cabinet-maker. Cosby is credited with the ornate “ecclesiastical” design of the moldings and the fresco around the ceilings of the parlor and the library, which flow together as a gracious and symmetrical space. Managed by Benchmark Hospitality International, a Houston hospitality services firm, Berry Hill may well become a favorite destination on the order of the Biltmore House or Grove Park Inn. The dream of three young owners to develop a tasteful residential community around the mansion house will take its cue from the Berry Hill Plantation Resort and should be a major economic stimulus to the region.

The Prizery, an 1890s tobacco warehouse and packing facility, is now a community center and event space featuring art, music, dance, and the performing arts.

THE PRIZERY
Finally, the restoration and adaptation of The Prizery, the most historically and architecturally significant of South Boston’s remaining tobacco warehouses, is a heart-warming tale of community interest, volunteerism and philanthropy combined with local and state resources. If only every community could be the recipient of a donation that has transformed the 1890s
R. J. Reynolds Company structure where tobacco was prepared for market, including stripping, sorting, packing and shipping. In 1996, John Cannon and Eva Harris donated the building to South Boston’s Community Arts Center Foundation, a grassroots organization determined to adapt the old warehouse into a community arts center. Volunteers went into action to clean and prepare the four-story building for its first event, a gala art show entitled “The Prizery Turns A New Leaf: an Art Exhibit.” Halifax native Chris Jones, now Executive Director of the Prizery, played the piano for the show. Thus began the transformation of The Prizery from a bootstrap volunteer project to a meticulously restored landmark building and a textbook example of adaptive reuse. The building now boasts the 300-seat state-of-the-art Chastain Theatre, the permanent Tobacco Heritage exhibit, and the fourth-floor banquet hall that seats 400 for fundraisers and other events. The Prizery, a center for music, dance, art, sculpture, theatre and long-distance education, is fast becoming the heart of the community.

“It took 12 years to get the money together to do this restoration of The Prizery,” says Chris Jones. “We raised $5 million in donations, as well as receiving funding from the Virginia Department of Transportation, the City of South Boston, and we earned $2 million in state and federal tax credits. Our architects and contractors were Hanbury Evans Wright Vlattas and Company, who built the Olympic Village for the 2002 Salt Lake City Olympics.”

The Prizery is a work of art. Over 150 windows were removed, cleaned and, where needed, rebuilt. The arched windows in the Italianate tower still contain their original 100-year-old glass. The structure’s brick was replaced with matching 100-year-old brick where necessary, and the oak beams had the lead-based paint removed and the wood sealed. “Hansbury Evans Wright Vlattas and Company even refurbished the old Westbrook elevator, which is the center of our Tobacco Heritage Exhibit,” says Jones. With an art gallery, banquet hall, classrooms, studios, museum space and a Visitor’s Center all complementing a marvelous performing arts center and theatre, South Boston and Halifax County are making their mark with the preservation of a fine historic structure and the community’s heritage.

These three stories of the ingenuity and dedication of a creative individual, a far-sighted team and an energetic community aren’t ending with the successful completion of their projects. They continue into a future made culturally richer and economically brighter for the entire Old Southside Virginia region by the inspiration and effort of its citizens.
Food and Wine Guide
NEW ARRIVALS ON THE TRIANGLE’S DINING SCENE
by Moreton Neal

A population explosion has taken place recently in the Metro Magazine coverage area. I can’t speak for the number of babies born or folks moving our way, but restaurants are multiplying at a surprising rate.

So many great choices, so little time! It was impossible to cover them all for Metro's spring food issue so I whittled my list down to 10, leaving out several that have surely become favorites by now. Rumor has it that Sharpie's in Beaufort, Blue Note LP and Southern Star in Cary, Jax Grill in Wilson, Blue Fun in Wake Forest, Cattails in Zebulon and Mura in Raleigh are all keepers, and I look forward to making their acquaintance in the near future.

Of the venues I chose, some are slick and swanky, some small and homey; a few are owned by familiar restaurateurs, others are first efforts. Though the service isn’t yet perfect in many, there are none in this group that I found unworthy of a return visit.

How fortunate we are to have such a vast smorgasbord of new restaurants. Metro diners, make your reservations, then go forth and welcome these newcomers to the neighborhood!

AZITRA
Briar Creek Shopping Center, Raleigh
Among the acres of big-box stores and corporate chain restaurants in Briar Creek Shopping Center, there is a curvy-scented breath of fresh air. Opened last fall, Azitra introduces to the Triangle a new era in Indian restaurants with the pink drink generation in mind. Goodbye, chai. Hello, Tipsy Turban. The brainchild of restaurateur, Ashok Arora, Azitra's prototype is Nabob in Virginia Beach. The success of his first Nabob paved the way for two more restaurants in Williamsburg and Newport News.

Arora's winning formula for this nouvelle-Indian restaurant includes a large airy space, funky-contemporary fixtures and dishware, a sleek bar complete with a flat screen TV (tuned to ESPN, of course) and a huge glass-walled wine closet. The mellow sounds of international electronica can be heard softly in the background, and a large patio adjoining the bar promises outside dining in warm weather.

The kitchen’s pride and joy is a giant Tandoori to cook most meats and breads. And Azitra's breads are outstanding, particularly the garlic and parsley sprinkled naan. The familiar Indian entrees were enjoyable, but appetizers—soup and spinach pakora—were the standouts. Don't forget to save room for dessert. The Azitra Special (carrot pudding with homemade mango ice cream) and Kheer (rice pudding flavored with rose water) are especially satisfying.

Manager Sonny Singh is particularly proud of the bar’s extensive drink menu. Besides the aforementioned Tipsy Turban (basically a Cosmopolitan topped off with champagne), there are the Bollywood Cocktail, Snake Charmer, Kama Sutra, Bombay Bellini—a bit of silliness and self-parody that I found delightful. Who says Indians don’t have a sense of humor? The Kumars of 42nd Street would be perfectly at home here.

Azitra’s reception at Briar Creek has surpassed expectations according to Singh, who previously managed Williamsburg's Nabob. “We love it here in Raleigh,” he enthused. “I’m never going back to Williamsburg.”

BIN 54
Glen Lennox Shopping Center, Chapel Hill
As I reported in the October issue of Metro, Bin is the cutting edge (no pun intended) in urban steakhouses. Owner George Bakatsias has gambled on finding a deep-pocketed sophisticated core of meat-eaters in Chapel Hill to support this venture, a bold move in the organic veggie-oriented side of the Triangle. So far, so good. Bin has already found its niche, and not just with beefeaters. Chef Dale Ray’s consistent offerings—his fish and vegetables are as perfectly prepared as his steaks—showcase his impressive skills gleaned from experiences in the best kitchens in America (see following article), and general manager Brett Jennings supports Dale's food with a thoughtfully selected wine list.

THE FLYING FISH
Downtown Hillsborough
One of Chapel Hill's most popular neighborhood eateries celebrates its 20th birthday this year with a surprise—a baby sister. The Flying Fish, spawned from the owners of the Flying Burrito, occupies a cozy little space in the middle of historic downtown Hillsborough. The place looks and feels like an old ice cream parlor, complete with an old-fashioned tile soda counter (now serving Margaritas). Mayberry, meet Monterrey.

Hungry Hillsboroughans can now stroll downtown for lunch or dinner featuring Phil and Ruth Campbell’s distinctive fusion of Mexican and Southern food. The Campbells call their style, “South by Southwest,” also the name of their as yet unpublished cookbook. As one would expect, fish is the specialty here, but in addition to hybrid dishes such as Sweet Potato-encrusted Catfish served with green chili cheese grits and tomato poblano gravy; plus Mahi Mahi Fajitas with jicama slaw, and a few more familiar burger and chicken offerings.

The Flying Burrito owes its longevity to its owners' continual presence, as well as their unusual, yet comforting, cooking. With their daughter running the floor at “Fish,” the Hillsborough community can expect the same warm reception and inspired recipes that make "The Burrito" so beloved in Chapel Hill.

JK's
North Hills Shopping Center, Raleigh

Many of our readers will argue that JK's isn't new, and they would be right. JK's is a familiar name on the Outer Banks dining scene, serving up the highest quality beef and seafood in Kill Devil Hills for years. But owner J.K. Norfleet couldn't resist the allure of renovation of the new North Hills and rose to the challenge by creating a second JK's.

General manager Chris Queensbury claims that this sophisticated restaurant is very similar to the old one, "just a smidgen more upscale." With its western theme (think downtown Dallas, not Dodge City), one expects a whole lot of cow meat, but "this is not a steakhouse," claims J.K. “We do serve excellent prime Nebraskan beef, but at least half our sales is fresh seafood delivered daily from the coast.” I joined Fred Benton for a tasting of CIA-trained Chef Cliff Foglesberg’s menu. Guided by Norfleet, we tried his own favorite menu item, grilled lamb chops, and found it superb. Seafood items were first rate, particularly Foglesberg’s inspired Walnut Crusted Black Grouper with celeriac fettucini.

JUJUBE
Glen Lennox Shopping Center, Chapel Hill

West Coast chef Charlie Deal arrived in North Carolina this year to partner with longtime Triangle restaurateur George Bakatsias to open three high-concept restaurants. First to open was Grasshopper in Durham’s Ninth Street neighborhood. Within weeks Bin 54 premiered in Chapel Hill. Right next door, Jujube, the partners’ third restaur-tant, teased us with a promising-looking façade for months. Eager diners had to wait almost until the end of the year before discovering its delights.

As slick as Grasshopper is rustic, Jujube’s striking interior features brightly colored walls covered, gallery-style, with imposing black and white photographs of Chinese street life. "Shanghai chic" seems to be the idea here. Guests can enjoy a floorshow, if desired, watching wok wizardry at the dining counter, which faces an open kitchen. For more traditional dining, individual tables adjoin a sleek bar. A “Zen garden” foreshadows warm weather lunches and suppers.

Deal’s food is startlingly flavorful. His unique cuisine—Chinese and Vietnamese flavor combinations using the highest quality ingredients—is without peer in these parts. Try his Niman Ranch Hanging Roast Pork glazed with hoisin and soy, spicy Lemongrass Grilled Flank Steak or Ginger Roasted Chicken with jujube and shallot compote for a deliciously exotic dining experience.
Brasa Brazilian Steakhouse

Brasa Steakhouse is an authentic Brazilian rodizio style restaurant. Rodizio is a method of serving fire-roasted meat that originates in Southern Brazil. Brasa offers over 12 different cuts of meat, including beef, pork, lamb, chicken and seafood, as well as an inclusive Appetizer and Salad Bar.

Open Daily 11 - 2 pm / 5 pm - close
Sunday Brunch 11 - 3 pm Sunday Dinner 5 - 9 pm

Best Sunday Brunch in The Triangle!

Brasa is located in Brier Creek Shopping Center just off Hwy 540, convenient to the Raleigh-Durham Airport and Research Triangle Park.

Merlion Restaurant

Until Merlion’s manager set me straight, I had no idea there existed a distinct cuisine called Singaporean. As far as I know, there was no such animal in North Carolina until a group of homesick ex-pats from that Asian metropolis, hungry for their native flavors, opened a fascinating little dining room in Southern Village last fall.

Melinda Tan, Merlion’s general manager, enlightened me. “Singapore is a mixture of many different cultures including British, but the predominant cuisine is a Chinese/Malay hybrid called Peranakan. Lemongrass, galangal and coriander are the primary seasonings, as well as hot chilis, and seafood, of course, since Singapore began as a fishing village.”

Melting points, but Merlion’s menu selection is quite different from other Southeast Asian restaurants in our area.

For dessert, we tried Sago pudding, one of the most unusually textured and delicious desserts I’ve ever experienced. It’s a dairy-free mold of tapioca topped with two sauces—one coconut, the second, caramelized palm sugar with a tangy quality reminiscent of cane molasses. It is no less than addictive.

Service at Merlion is its weak point, but I imagine that will improve with experience. Adventurous diners should find Merlion a rewarding experience and a welcome addition to our increasingly international food scene.

115 Midtowne

North Hills Shopping Center, Raleigh

Fooled by the vestigial e on its name, I expected something a bit stodgier than the transitional-style dining room of 115 Midtowne. Kate Cole’s succinctly elegant décor belies the exuberant nature of its cuisine. Chef
Scott Cole, who happens to be Kate’s husband, describes his own style as “international eclectic.”

“I don’t shy away from the label ‘fusion’ and I like to use a lot of flavors on a plate,” he explains, “but I try to keep flavors true to the region they came from.”

The lightness of our fresh crab and avocado salad on watercress, fresh mint with a citrus vinaigrette was the perfect foil for a heavily spiced Sri Lankan lamb curry. Rich chocolate lava cake with raspberry puree and a cherry-walnut bread pudding with house-made gelato topped off a beautiful meal.

Scott’s admirers (including Fred Benton—see “Off the Menu”) have followed him from Margaux’s where he practiced classical French cooking, to Maximillian’s, which he describes as specializing “a bit more ‘free-form’ than I... prefer.” Scott is thrilled to be at the helm of his own kitchen at last, and so are we.

THE NASHER CAFÉ
Duke Museum of Art, Durham

The powers-that-be at Duke University pulled off quite a coup when they commissioned one of the great architects in the world, Rafael Vinoly, to design the new Duke Museum of Art. Another stroke of genius was recruiting seasoned Durham caterer Amy Tornquist to operate the museum café, a significant ingredient in its appeal. I have just one criticism about the collaboration: The café is open during museum hours, which means only one evening each week. Thursday night at the museum is abuzz with events (lectures, films and concerts) to follow or preface dinner there. So double your pleasure with an evening of both the visual and culinary arts, or enjoy weekday lunches and Sunday brunches at a uniquely satisfying venue in Durham.

RESTAURANT SAINT-JACQUES
Six Forks Road, Raleigh

Every Francophile says the same thing: “In France, they know how to do it right.” Though the reference may be fashion, love or the art of living, this Francophile always interprets “it” to mean food. Nothing is better than good French food, and as I wrote in this column last year, Saint-Jacques offers the same menu you would expect from Marseilles to Menton—the gutsy dishes of la cuisine du soleil.

Trained with one of the world’s greatest chefs, Roger Verge, owner/manager Lil Lacassagne brings the classic dishes of Provence to the state. Bouillabaisse, Rack of Lamb with Rosemary jus, Moules Marinieres, Coq au Vin, Coquille Saint Jacques (the signature dish—scallops, served on a nest of smoked bacon and julienne fennel with a citrus beurre blanc) are perfectly executed.

Lacassagne has almost a missionary’s zeal for sharing the finest French dining experience with his guests. If you have a passion for great food but haven’t yet tried this little bistro, make a reservation soon at Saint-Jacques and allow Lacassagne to show you what “doing it right” is all about.

RESTAURANT SAVANNAH
North Hills Shopping Center, Raleigh

Savannah’s Bermuda-shuttered façade is positioned to catch the eye as soon as you turn into the main entrance of North Hills. The same post-modern look continues on the inside of the building, a large, attractive contemporary space with a few subtle references to antebellum grandeur.

By the time I arrived, the restaurant’s first kitchen team had already left after just a few months, taking with them a menu maybe just a bit too rarified for Savannah’s target market.

Owner and executive chef Chris Bender (of Five Star) has quickly filled the gap with the same choices one would expect in a typical low country home or restaurant. The lunch menu featured She-Crab Soup with just the perfect hint of sherry, Shrimp and Grits nicely accented by chunks of Andouille sausage, Crabcakes sauced with creamed corn, Savannah Chicken Salad Sandwich, and a decadently gravy-laden Chicken Pan Pie. Desserts include Sweet Potato Crème Brûlée, Banana Bread Pudding and “Trackside Pie,” (pecans and coconut in a chess-type baked pie) which has to be Savannah’s signature dessert. Don’t miss it.

Bender’s cuisine is not another creative take on “Southern regional.” Encountering these old familiar dishes in such a contemporary setting seems a bit dissonant, yet I found this concept refreshing. I predict that Bender and his partner Vincent Barresi have hit their mark and can expect a long run at North Hills.

Two local connections are intertwined with the Denmark cartoon imbroglio. The US ambassador to the Kingdom is Jim Cain of Raleigh. And cartoonist and novelist Doug Marlette from Hillsborough—teaching this semester at the University of Oklahoma—has been quoted extensively about the issue around the world since he has the honor to be the first to irritate the jihadists with a cartoon in 2002 depicting an Arab driving a Ryder truck with a bomb in the back. The caption reads: “What would Mohammed drive?”

Ambassador Cain (a Who’s Who in the January 2006 Metro) writes that “taboos about religion” don’t exist in a country where only two percent of the population attends church regularly. And 95 percent of Danes are just that, an extended family of the same race that does not often deal with “diversity” in its national life—except lately with the 2 percent that are Muslim.

Marlette depicts the Danish cartoonists as prisoners in the attic, waiting for the authorities to turn them over to the howling mobs. In an article for Salon.com, he makes the case: “When we withhold information in the name of a misguided sensitivity, by default we allow nihilistic street mobs from London to Jakarta to define the debate in this country. In effect, we have capitulated to intimidation and threats and negotiated with terrorists. No need for Zarqawi to behead us. We do it ourselves.”

The eruption of emotion and violence about the depictions of Mohammed tells us that rational diplomacy will not work in dealing with the rise of extremist Islam. They have already had their day—from the 7th to the 16th century; now they are relics of the Middle Ages, estranged from the rational world. The great 14th-century traveler Ibn Battutah traversed the mighty empire of the descendants of Mohammed in awe of all he surveyed. Today, he would weep at the decline into chaos and senseless murder, at the ignorant intractability of the once glorious empires of Allah.

But the concern that should be most on our minds is the disreputable and squalid response to the cartoon controversy by many of our own leaders in the West. Even White House confidant Karen Hughes thanked the US media for not publishing or broadcasting the cartoons. The ubiquitous Bill Clinton labeled them “appalling.” And in the UK, Foreign Secretary Jack Straw praised the “sensitivity” of Fleet Street for not reprinting the offending cartoons. So tiny Denmark is the land of the free and brave in today’s tortured political calculus? Add in the courage of scientist Bjorn Lomborg, whose book The Skeptical Environmentalist exposed the extreme “green” movement as a creed not supported by the facts, and the Danes rise to the top of the tree of truth and knowledge. The rhetoric of the deep environmentalists is an example of “we are right because we are righteous,” the same refrain we hear over and over from the Islamic leadership.

It’s actually an anthem, sung loudly on college campuses in the 1960s and ’70s, touting the utopia of world socialism and the battle cry to bring down individual freedom. This message failed, causing the faithful to alter the words to ring in an age of “sensitivity,” and with it speech codes and regulations to smother the truth and elevate the mediocre. In classrooms, offices and public places, citizens dare not stand up for the facts of the matter for fear of the consequences of hurting someone’s feelings. In our world today, everyone is “special,” even if they behead non-believers on television and murder innocent bystanders for no reason anyone can explain. When truth is stained with fear, it no longer exists. We have become cowards and not deserving of liberty.

NOTES FROM LA-LA LAND

Wake County State Senator Neal Hunt has stated he will introduce a bill in the Legislature when it reconvenes in May to disestablish the Triangle Transit Authority and call for the establishment of a Raleigh-Wake County—based entity to plan future rail or monorail transit for the metropolitan area. This meets the reality that the old TTA was ill conceived and its plans outdated. Since Durham has pulled out of the federally mandated Metropolitan Statistical Area—and as the Raleigh Metro is four times more densely populated than the Durham equivalent—that makes sense.

UNC system president Erskine Bowles is facing the big lie in North Carolina public education by trotting out the figures. According to the data, of every 100 8th graders, 58 percent finish high school, 38 percent attend college but only 18 percent graduate. Only 34 percent are proficient in math and reading. Bowles is calling for a reorganization of the education curricula to create more teachers, but that will only work if the content of the courses is altered drastically or eliminated. At last count, there were over 20 Masters programs at UNC-CH, most of which are bogus and designed to bestow a degree on the unqualified.

I hope Wake County parents of public school children rise up in a jihad and run out of town the administrators and school board members who have continued the practice of busing in the face of the fact it was struck down by a Supreme Court decision. The latest Diaspora of 11,500 students in the name of failed social theory is too high a price to pay for social theory.

Hanson's path to the Tar Heel State was a bit more circuitous, and involved a young woman, as do the paths of many young men. While a student at the U of Iowa, Hanson met a girl named Megan O'Connell in France during a summer school program. Following the summer, they kept in touch. They both ended up applying for the same archeology job at NCSU. She got the job, Hanson got the girl. They first moved to Chapel Hill in '93, eventually ending up in Raleigh.

Bemis explained that he met Hanson in 1997 through a mutual friend. "We realized that we not only had an interest in a lot of singer-songwriter music—which we enjoyed playing when we got together—but also we were interested in a lot of roots music—you know, bluegrass and Irish tunes and such," he said. "We recognized that we had quite a kinship."

Hanson affirmed that Bemis and he were instantly simpatico, noting that "John was the first guy I talked to who, when I mentioned The Flatlanders, actually knew who I was talking about. I knew that was good." "We started playing together. We got up and played Townes songs and Merle Haggard. We liked what Gillian Welch was doing, too, even though she was new. We weren't re-inventing the wheel. There are plenty of people playing traditional music. We just loved the sound—the Louvin Brothers harmonies, for instance. We figured out that we could really sing together, so we thought why not write? We both had writing backgrounds."

"Over time we wrote all the songs that appeared on our first album—Lucky Rabbit's Foot," Bemis said. "We were writing stuff that tended to play to our strengths at the time. We loved singing together—we loved the harmonizing—and we were particularly fond of the brother acts like the Louvin Brothers. We wrote things that fit what we enjoyed most." When asked about their songwriting, and Hooverville's increasingly eclectic sound, Hanson was upbeat.

"It's definitely evolving," he said. "Sometimes the old-time roots come through, but now it's more of a mix of different elements. I mean, there's definitely rootsy elements, like more blues influence on some of the songs. There's also some Tex-Mex influence, and even a nod to Celtic on a couple of tunes."

"A lot of it has to do with just bringing a song to the whole band," he noted. "One guy hears the song one way, another hears the song a different way. You either all agree on something, like, say, that a song is a honky-tonk shuffle, or you let the idea compete and see what works."

When Hooverville started, it was simply the Bemis/Hanson duo. While that approach was pretty elemental, and allowed them to sing together, it was an instrumentally limited situation.

"John and I were wanting something substantial on the bottom," Hanson said, "so we could free up ourselves both vocally and instrumentally. Once you do that, all of a sudden you can phrase vocals differently. Now and then you can almost stop playing and the music's still going. You can think about how you want to deliver a vocal line. I mean, music is all about the emotion. It's not about, hey, look at this great guitar player, because none of us are that great. We want to convey the emotion of the song."

In speaking about the motivation for bringing bassist Paul Dowds into Hooverville in 2000, Bemis added a thought on the instrumental aspect. "As time went on we realized that the songs we were writing could be expanded musically," he said, "that we could do some other interesting things if we had some additional members." If a bass player offered new musical possibilities, then what about a bass player and a drummer? Enter drummer Nathan Logan. "Having a drummer and bass player allows Greg and me to do some other things, instrumentally," Bemis added.

"It's hard not to rock out once you get a drummer," Hanson laughed. "A lot of the songs that are on Lucky Rabbit's Foot were written as if there was a rhythm section there. Some weren't, of course, but some of those songs could really swing out with a drummer. Those songs are more honky tonk and less folk."

Hooverville will be doing a house concert in Hillsborough April 8, and they'll be performing during the Shakori Hills Grassroots Festival of Music and Dance, April 20-23, in Silk Hope, NC. Also note that at Shakori Hills, Hooverville will also be performing a set with Katherine Whalen, a founding member of Squirrel Nut Zippers, an accomplished jazz singer and, according to Hanson, also a fine singer of Americana tunes.

DISCOLOGY

David Childers & the Modern Don Juans: Jailhouse Religion (Little King Records)

On the subject of North Carolina musicians who rock and write intelligent songs in the bargain, let me suggest that you run out and buy Jailhouse Religion. Childers lives in the vicinity of Charlotte, and when he's not playing hellacious rock tunes in the Americana vein he practices law. The Modern Don Juans, however, are Childers' lawless side, so don't expect any sort of tame music. He may write songs as topical and wry as "The General Belgrano"—observations on the Argentinean cruiser a British sub put on the bottom of the Atlantic during the Falklands War—but his highly literate lyrics come wrapped in pure rock music. The album comes packaged with a DVD, which features the video for the title track.
HOOVERVILLE: HOMEGROWN AND DISTINCTIVE

The Triangle-based quartet Hooverville—John Bemis, Greg Hanson, Paul Dowds and Nathan Logan—has released a new album titled Follow That Trail of Dust Back Home. The disc is an outstanding follow-up to their debut record, Lucky Rabbit's Foot.

The Hooverville sound begins with an affinity for traditional music and songwriters such as Merle Haggard, Townes Van Zandt, Jimmie Dale Gilmore and Greg Brown. Both the Hooverville albums vibrate Americana in its broadest sense, encompassing influences that range from Bill Monroe to Lead Belly to Rodney Crowell. Of course, Follow That Trail is comprised entirely of original tunes by Bemis, Hanson and Dowds, so their myriad influences have served as a point of common reference for a music that's becoming distinctively Hooverville.

Load up Follow That Trail in your CD player and take it from the top. By the fourth song you'll catch the drift. All four tracks are twang-rich numbers, but stylistically they're not of-a-piece. “Carrying This Heartache” comes the closest of the four to the work of old-time balladeers, while “Another Sweet Dawn” has the rhythmic thump of classic country, except that the bass guitar is pushed up in the mix and suspiciously funky. “Rain Song” is a paradigm of modern folk, while “Honey”—a Paul Dowds tune—feels classic country, but the intricate layering of the mix is a rock approach, and Hanson's harmonica is played in a folk style (and would be absent in a purely classic country arrangement). In other words, the guys in Hooverville have been seduced by genuine country music, yet have remained open to other propositions.

Hooverville finds its genesis in the meeting of Hanson and Bemis—kindred souls who grew up in vastly different regions and got up with each other in the Triangle.

Hanson calls Mount Vernon, Iowa, home. The little Iowa burg features a little college—Cornell College—and is a short distance from the University of Iowa at Iowa City. Hanson is, in fact, a graduate of the U of Iowa, where he majored in Anthropology and Psychology.

Bemis grew up in Oriental, NC, on Pamlico Sound—the sailing capital of North Carolina—where boats outnumber residents 3 to 1. Oriental's town Web site, www.visitoriental.com, claims that Oriental is, “pretty much in the center of things.” That's only true in the most refined sense, i.e., boating on Pamlico Sound, so an intelligent guy like Bemis was bound to leave for college. He opted for another center of things—UNC-Chapel Hill.

Living in close proximity to the U of Iowa, and being keen on music, Hanson allowed that he was very much aware of the music scene that developed in Iowa City. Indeed, this particular musical hotbed is noted for producing talent the magnitude of Greg Brown, Bo Ramsay, Dave Moore and, recently, Brown's incredibly talented daughter, Pieta. Bemis, meanwhile, enjoyed his stay at UNC so much that he remained in the area after graduat-in question—at least one of them—has more on its mind than sports. Like, how about botany?

Betsy Green Moyer, daughter of Pulitzer Prize-winning dramatist and former UNC professor Paul Green, has compiled and edited some of her father's writings in the new collection, Paul Green’s Plant Book: An Alphabet of Flowers and Folklore. In addition to gathering the late playwright's writings in a decidedly different genre, Moyer—an accomplished wildlife photographer—offers some of her own work as an accompaniment to the text. Moyer also makes two area appearances to discuss the collection: Wednesday evening, March 1, at Durham's Regulator Bookshop, Friday evening, March 3, at Raleigh's Quail Ridge Books.

Also out of Chapel Hill, two UNC-based poets—Chris Davis and Michael White—will read from their new collections, A History of the Only War and Re.Entry, respectively—at Quail Ridge Books on Sunday afternoon, March 26.

AND WHERE'S NC STATE?

Despite a good season, NC State may seem to have been left out of the discussion we've been having here. UNC, Duke, Duke, UNC—where's the Wolfpack?

Just to even the odds, two leading North Carolina novelists—each connected to NCSU—are continuing tours this month with their new books.

Kaye Gibbons, a long-time writer-in-residence at the university, travels to McIntyre’s Books at Fearrington Village for a reading from Me by Ellen Foster, the follow-up to her bestselling debut novel. Gibbons' reading is scheduled for Sunday afternoon, March 5, in theFearrington Village Barn.

Also, Angela Davis-Gardner—a distinguished professor at State—visits Durham's Regulator Bookshop on Thursday evening, March 30, to read from and sign her enticing new novel, Plum Wine, the subject of this column last month.

While NC State may have missed out being the subject of a basketball book this month, these writers prove that the pen may well be mightier than the . . . point guard.

MORE BIG NAMES — NO BASKETBALL

Two other events this month are worth mentioning—two nationally and internationally known bestselling writers whose Triangle visits are sure to draw big crowds.

First, one of the leading mavens of mystery, Martha Grimes, visits Quail Ridge Books on Wednesday evening, March 8, to read from her latest Richard Jury mystery, The Old Wine Shades. This is the 20th outing for recently suspended Scotland Yard detective Jury, and the title pub here serves as the starting point for an investigation that begins over a shared pint or two. Grimes' appearance in Raleigh is one of only nine US signings—a privilege for the bookstore and a don't-miss opportunity for area fans.

A week later, memoirist Frances Mayes—author of Under the Tuscan Sun and other Tuscan-tinged titles—broadens her horizons with a look at other hotspot destinations in A Year in the World: Journeys of a Passionate Traveler. The new book takes her to Spain and Portugal, to Greece, Crete and Turkey, to Sicily and Morocco, and to... Scotland? Well, that last one's not as Mediterranean as the other destinations, but it is exotic in its own way. In each case, Mayes brings both her polished prose—and a discerning palate—to adventures that promise to charm all of us armchair travelers. As with her book, Mayes samples a couple of the Triangle's major ports of call, visiting McIntyre's Books on Wednesday evening, March 15, and the Regulator Bookshop on Thursday evening, March 16.

MARLETTE AND CONROY COMETH

In April, the libraries of several major Triangle universities—Duke, UNC, NC State and NC Central—are co-sponsoring the North Carolina Festival of the Book. The free six-day event takes place in Durham this year, April 25-30. A complete schedule of events can be found at www.ncbook.org.

As a preview of this event, next month's issue of Metro will include an interview with two of the festival's leading names: bestselling novelist and memoirist Pat Conroy and Pulitzer Prize-winning editorial cartoonist and novelist Doug Marlette—discussing their long and lasting friendship. It's a conversation not to be missed.
NEW AND NOTEWORTHY

MARCH MADNESS
March Madness is apparently not confined to the world of basketball this year. As information began flowing into Metro's offices about this month's readings and signings at area bookstores, a theme began to emerge, one which began with a well-timed basketball title but then expanded, with several titles seeming to find ties to one ACC powerhouse or another in the Triangle.

Was it coincidence? Or was there actually competition afoot between the covers, as well as on the court?

The first book to catch my attention actually boasts a basketball theme: Will Blythe's To Hate Like This Is To Be Happy Forever: A Thoroughly Obsessive, Intermittently Uplifting, and Occasionally Unbiased Account of the Duke-North Carolina Basketball Rivalry—a slam-dunk title, no matter how you look at it. Blythe was the literary editor of Esquire before turning to writing full-time, and his pieces have appeared in the New York Times Book Review, The New Yorker, Rolling Stone, and The Oxford American—as well as Sports Illustrated and the anthology The Best American Sports Writing.

Whatever his journalistic credits, however, Blythe's To Hate Like This Is To Be Happy Forever is not entirely objective in this outing. He all but admits as much in the bio (OK, anyone who just reads his bio) will see that he's a Chapel Hill native—and that a few miles makes all the difference. But despite being grounded in interviews with coaches, players and fans, the book isn't ultimately intended as journalism but as something more personal—some hybrid between reporting and memoir. But that personal examination takes this exploration further, not just into the world of sports but the world of Southern society and manners and more.

Whichever team you're rooting for, Blythe's book marks a fascinating look at one of the fiercest feuds in sports history—and the author himself is visiting each team's territory this month. On Friday evening, March 3—the eve of the Carolina-Duke game—Blythe stops by McIntyre's Books in Fearrington Village (our Chapel Hill representative here) for a reading and signing, and then visits Durham's Regulator Bookshop on Saturday afternoon, March 4—just hours before the big battle.

MORE DUKE
If Blythe's book at least starts out with a UNC bias, this month's other big basketball book pitches its tent firmly in Duke's camp—literally. Aaron Dinin's The Krzyzewskiville Tales (published by Duke University Press, no less) takes The Canterbury Tales as its model, with 12 students gathering in the tent city named after ... well, we all know who its named after, obviously! And we know The Canterbury Tales too: pilgrims taking turns telling tales—moral here, ribald there, etc. It's a great set-up really, with these modern-day pilgrims—er, students—competing for best tale with the same fervor that they'll take into Cameron Indoor Stadium at the end of the contest. Dinin is a recent Duke grad; Coach K's wife provides a foreword; Duke University is publishing the book—it's all in the family. And Dinin holds to the home court advantage with his single area reading: Friday evening, March 3, at the Regulator (going head-to-head, it's worth noting, with Will Blythe's reading just further south).

MORE UNC
Meanwhile, just across I-40 ... While Dinin is indulging in Duke myth and history, UNC-grad Scott Fowler, now a sports columnist for The Charlotte Observer, explores his alma mater's past by asking the question to North Carolina Tar Heels: Where Have You Gone? And to whom does he ask this question? The list includes Phil Ford, Billy Cunningham, Joseph Forte, Charles Scott, Larry Miller, Bobby Jones, Bob McAdoo, Mike O'Koren and Eric Montross—all All-Americans, and each of them interviewed about their lives and careers after leaving those Carolina blue jerseys behind. Interviews with other star players and with Tar Heel coaches Dean Smith, Bill Guthridge and Roy Williams round out this study, and a foreword by Woody Durham kicks it off. I mean, tips it off.

Fowler visits the Triangle for a discussion and signing on Monday evening, March 13—interestingly, at least partway in Duke territory: After all isn't the Barnes & Noble at The Streets at Southpoint technically in Durham?

MORE UNC—BOTANY BY PAUL GREEN

boxing belts for his enormous waist-cinchers this spring. Unlike Fendi, McQueen’s belt is paired with bold looks in neutral colors that could hold their own without the Amazonian accessory. The wide belt is a must-have for daytime looks, and a perfect way to balance substantial platform shoes—but it’s also in for evening. Zac Posen showed a gorgeous blue ball gown with a high-impact wide belt that perfectly complemented the high collar. Even if you don’t usually draw attention to your waistline, consider trying this accessory for spring; wide belts, especially in black, perform the optical illusion of making a waist that much smaller.

CREED’S LATEST ALCHEMY

As a fan of sandalwood, I was excited to try Creed’s new Original Santal fragrance. In a world where perfume is too often reduced to mediocrity by focus group testing and crowd-pleasing, Creed stands apart as a family-owned and run business that uses the finest ingredients to create truly unique scents. Sandalwood itself has a very distinctive scent, so when I first spritzed Original Santal I was disappointed not to smell it immediately. But then I realized that what was wafting toward my nose was actually better than sandalwood, which was faintly detectable as a top note in the composition. Perfumer Olivier Creed has managed to capture the warm, woody yet fresh sensibility of sandalwood in an entirely new way: sandalwood, cinnamon, coriander and juniper are succeeded by heart notes of lavender, orange tree leaves and rosemary, with base notes of vanilla and Tonka bean. The result is a unisex fragrance that is irresistible. Suitable for all seasons, Original Santal by Creed is available this month at Saks Fifth Avenue in Raleigh (4 oz. spray $198, 2.5 oz spray $178, 1 oz. spray $90). A portion of the sales will benefit the United Nations High Commission for Refugees to help people displaced by natural and other disasters.

BRUISEWEAR: BLACK + BLUE

As long as we're having fashion flashbacks, remember the black and blue color combo of the late '80s? Well, that's back this season, too, revived with a dash of burgundy or pink, and it's poised to become a trend thanks to one man who designs three influential collections every season, Marc Jacobs. Improbably, his bruise-y color mix looks fresh for spring, particularly when put against the backdrop of white, as in Jacobs' spot-on spring collection for Louis Vuitton, which showed among other black and blue looks a black knee-length dress with a royal blue topcoat. Jacobs' namesake line, as well as the spin-off Marc by Marc Jacobs' collection also features the slightly ominous but oh-so-cool combination.

Platform Shoes and Wide Belts: RETRO ALL OVER AGAIN FOR SPRING

Springtime often ushers in a frothier sort of fashion. After months of being shrouded in thick winter layers, it's natural to have a craving for the delicate, the diaphanous and the form fitting. But this spring is a little different. Feminine dresses are anchored with substantial belts; a voluminous blouse is paired with the razor thin silhouette of cigarette-leg pants. The overall effect is bolder and cleaner than in seasons past, with designers drawing inspiration from the '40s and '60s in particular. Before you start shopping, take note of these key pieces and combos.

AIM HIGHER: PLATFORM SHOES

This strong spring look starts from the ground up. Platforms are the undisputed shoe of the season, a trend jump-started by a spectacular platform pump in shiny patent leather from Lanvin that had every fashion editor doing back-flips. Spring fashion from the ankle up may reference post-WWII styles, but the platform actually became the shoe of choice in the '30s. However, the appeal of extra height afforded by platform soles was nothing new then. One can spot a kind of wood-soled platform sandal on the feet of Greek and Roman statues, and a version of this, the “geta,” was worn for centuries in Japan. In 16th-century Venice, the “chopine,” a kind of platform slipper with a 6-inch base, was all the rage. But soon the high-heel took Europe as a more practical way to get a little lift. It was not until Salvatore Ferragamo began creating his stunning cork-heeled sandals in the '30s that platforms came back into favor. But many of us today associate the platform with the '70s, when both men and women favored a chunky version, particularly popular as a boot. From Elton John's sparkly versions, to the curious clear acrylic platform that doubled as goldfish aquariums, to John Travolta's Saturday Night Fever dancing shoes, platforms will forever be associated with the far-out styles of the disco decade. A resurgence of the platform in the mid-'90s caught on in particular with young Japanese women, whose soles reached dizzying heights. After a fatal motor accident in which a delayed driver response was directly linked to a pair of platforms, Osaka passed a law making it illegal to wear this specific style of footwear while driving.

Caveat emptor: Platforms may be hazardous to your health (and that of those in your path) ... but they sure do look great again for spring 2006. Platforms are often more comfortable than regular heels, since they actually raise the entire foot, offering more height for less arch-torturing angle. In addition to Lanvin's show-stopping shoe, Ferragamo has introduced a black and gold platform sandal that references the designer's earlier Deco versions, Moschino's multi-colored leather sandal channels the '70s with chic, and the ever-seductive Gucci offers platform Mary Janes in snakeskin.

“You have more chemotherapy this week?”
“Do your pills look like these?”
“Tell me about your colonoscopy. It went okay? Isn’t that amnesia drug just a wonder? Don’t feel a thing. At least if you do, you forget about it. Reckon that is just as good. But it must have really hurt when they were doing it? I just don’t understand how that works. Did you drink that horrible pink stuff?”

The conversation becomes more explicit. Ugh. I’m squirming. I get a “go-cup” and bail out.

Virginia inquires about Mandrake who couldn’t make it today. Oh, my God! He was on heavy dosages of morphine all night. The description of his screaming and wrestling with demons sounds like a scene from the classic Sinatra movie, Man with a Golden Arm. The girls are all leaning forward slack jawed just inches from Florence’s face, enthralled by Mandrake’s misery, as I slip by.

I shuffle down to the cafe just a few yards away, find a booth with just one older gentleman near me, and set up shop. Safe—I think. I order more coffee and start to read the local section of the paper.

“Hi, Mr. Williams.” A young woman is greeting the gentleman near me. “How are you?”

I pray he will respond, “Tolerable.”

“Well, I was feeling pretty good until I passed the dress shop. That’s where I bought Margie’s burying dress. The lady there seen me through the door and come out and said hello. Mighty nice of her to remember. Margie was so eat up by liver cancer that nothing she had looked right when they went to lay her out. She didn’t weigh 75 pounds.”

Gulp.

“I understand you’ve been seeing our neighbor, Mary Louise Smithwick. She all right?” the young woman asked.

“Lord, honey. You know no longer than I been seeing her, she’s had two knees and a hip replaced.”

No need to order the scrambled eggs. My stomach was churning. Time to go. Then, between you and me, I realized I was smiling and suppressing a laugh. “Gee,” I thought to myself. “If he can find a few more good spare parts, he just might be able to enter Mary Louise in the Miss North Carolina contest.”

I left a couple of dollars on the table for the coffee and headed for the door chuckling. A neighbor spotted me and yelled across a row of booths, “Hey Carroll. How you doing?”

“Tolerable, tolerable,” I replied, and kept walking, ignoring the puzzled look on his face.

Be sure to tune in to Festival 2006, February 25 to March 26.
PaPa had his chair in the sitting room over by the long window that went almost to the floor and looked out on the side porch. From there he could see the fig tree that stood by the south kitchen door and the porch with several handmade mismatched straight chairs—"slave chairs," some folks called them, with legs so worn down by decades of use that the seats almost touched the floor. It was here that we sat on hot summer days and shelled butterbeans and peeled peaches from the orchard for canning. We waved occasionally at folks driving by on the dirt road that ran by the Pleasant Plains Methodist Church and snaked back through the fields and the homesteads of the various Gregories—Nick and Gerry, Wilbur and Louise, Sherwood and Ruth, Ed and Lona—in that order. It just struck me that there was only one child between the lot of them, Wilbur's son Don whom I taught in high school, who died as a young man.

PaPa entered the room quietly. Regardless of how much company was there, he seldom spoke until he found his rocker, sat down, placed his black, high-topped Brogans squarely on the floor, anchored his two hands at the thumbs and began to tap his fingers gently together at about the rate of a normal heartbeat. When he did speak, it was in a low, gentle voice that never sought attention or advantage by force or volume. A conversation with him required one's whole attention, and, as I think about it, perhaps that was by design.

After it was clear that he was settled in and engaged, someone would ask, "How are you doing today, PaPa?" After a respectable silence, on occasion he would answer simply "piert," a common response from country folks of his generation when they felt especially fit. However, when it came from their lips, it was "piert." I suppose "piert" now has disappeared from the language. My friend Faye Simmons, whose folks were from Corinth Holder in Johnston County, said her grandmother used that expression, but she never understood what she was saying until a recent conversation between the two of them at Sunday school. I attended a Valentine luncheon at Lexington's "new southern cuisine" restaurant, Southern Curiosity, with Pat Shore, chief of staff to former US Senator Sam Ervin and director of the North Carolina office in Washington, DC for many years. Pat said folks in her home county of Yadkin would get even more enthusiastic and say, "Mighty piert." So I guess "piert" was not just a Down East thing.

As time passed, however, and the aches and pains of advancing age caught up with PaPa, he was less apt to respond with "piert."

"How are you doing PaPa?"
"Tolerable, tolerable," he would respond. He never volunteered additional information, and it was obvious any further queries about his health were not welcome. "Tolerable, tolerable," he would reply as if to say, "Now move on."

Oh, for the day when folks were less eager to share their maladies, or, perhaps better put, inflict their maladies on others. Doing so has become a national pastime, a totally boorish way of making conversation, in my opinion. I caution myself constantly against doing it, but the older I get the more difficult it is to stifle my own complaints.

I find it particularly offensive when I am easing into the day with a cup of coffee, a bagel and my paper, and people settle in near me and begin to chronicle their ailments. A covey of them arrive together each Sunday morning after attending early services and often alight near me. Most are blue-haired ladies who long ago saw their husbands off to Glory. One, however, is clinging to what is left of her time-ravaged spouse, and occasionally when Mandrake is feeling "piert," she brings him with her. I sense there is a bit of one-upmanship involved, though Mandrake is no trophy at this point in life. Other regulars and I give up a collective groan when they arrive and offer silent prayers that they will settle in out of earshot. Recently, another early-morning patron espied them approaching from the parking lot, petticoats flapping, and exclaimed for all to hear, "Oh no! Here comes the complaint department."

There are at least 10 to 15 minutes of absolute chaos as they discuss choices, make up their minds, change their minds, give their orders, hold up the line by searching for exact change, and chat up the cashiers, many of whom have their names written artfully on tags. "Rosita. What a lovely name. My mother's name was Rose. Bet that is Rosita in Spanish, isn't it? That is so sweet. Missed you last Sunday. Where were you? Pity you have to work on Sunday."

This is all spoken without stopping to take a breath. The monologue concludes with a wide, sustained, "This smile is just for you."

"Oh, I'm younger than you, Mabel, I'll do it." Nasty look from Mabel, and "uh huhs" from the other girls. Clara needs a knife for

THE EAMES LOUNGE CHAIR:
still sitting pretty after 50 years

Celebrating their 50th anniversary in 2006, the Eames lounge chair and ottoman are considered among the most significant and widely recognized furniture designs of the 20th century. The rich veneer and supple leather suggest old-fashioned luxury translated into modern forms, setting an enduring standard for comfort and elegance.

IDES OF MARCH

Rich Folks, Listen up:
They say March enters as a lion, full of bluster and roar, so I suppose this might be the appropriate time to do a little ranting and raving about the art world. Here are a few of my pet peeves and thoughts on the matter—hang on to your hats.

There are dozens and dozens of worthwhile charities in the state, and it seems that all of them are looking for a free handout from artists to donate artwork for both silent and live auctions. This is all well and good, often the artist can gain some exposure and the charity benefits from the sale of the art. This is also beneficial when the artist and the charity have a long-standing relationship and respect each other. What is NOT acceptable is when a fancy black-tie charity event asks for artwork and then treats the artist in question like a second-class citizen. On many occasions I have been witness to artists not receiving tickets for events to which they donate, even when the value of their donation would buy several tickets—if not an entire table at the party in question. Recently, at an event in Raleigh, I watched as an artist I know donated a large painting to a charity event only to be denied access to the bad dinner that was served. To heap insult on injury, the artist wasn't even offered a complimentary cocktail (and the wine that was being served definitely wasn't going to break the bank)! Now that's cheap, and downright rude. When I brought up the fact to one of the volunteers at the event, that at least the young artist should be given a libation out of respect for her generosity, you would have thought I was asking them to dig the Panama Canal with a teaspoon. Artists awake! If you get tapped for a donation, ask just what you are getting out of it. And if you can't even attend the event for your generous donation, tell them to look for handouts elsewhere.

Now, on to the patrons of these same auctions. I recently attended an event in Durham wall to wall with rich folk. The cars were all BMW's, Jag's and Benz's, the clothes were all boutique and the bling was all real. So far so good you would think, a perfect situation. Well, you know what? When the auction took place you would think that each $25 increment that the auctioneer begged for was tantamount to pulling the eyeteeth from these folks. And remember all of these purchases were tax deductible, so it's not like they are giving up their first born kids to indentured servitude. These folks could easily write a check for $100,000 without blinking, but you could just see the glee in their eyes if they could get something for less than retail at these auctions. That is when they pay attention. HEY RICH FOLKS, get some class. Even if you don't want the artwork you bid on, it's for a good cause. Hell, give the art to your maid after the event if you don't like it, but stop being such cheap wimps.

If one more person smugly tells me how sophisticated the Triangle art scene is I think I will strangle them and throw them off the top of one of those new condos off Glenwood South that look out over some service station or tar black parking lot as the "view." To be honest, we live in quite a provincial area where, unfortunately, much of the most popular art is some of the most insipid: banal landscapes that look like they were painted by monkeys on lithium; abstracts that are about as inventive as zwieback—derivative schlock that seem to find willing homes. But photography? Video? Installation? Assemblage? Performance art? These orphans are only wanted in larger metropolitan areas it seems. So much for our feigned sophistication.

Glance Gallery (www.glancegallery.com) is featuring video installations by the young and ambitious David Colagiovanni, as well as electrified mantra paintings by the ever-inventive Mia Yoon. Video art is now a sta-

COASTAL PROJECTS SHORT-CHANGED IN FEDERAL BUDGET

Here we go again. The President’s 2007 budget was recently released and for the coast it looks like more of the same. There is no money for beach renourishment (or protection if you wish), virtually no money for shallow draft inlet dredging, and a slight, but inadequate, increase in funding for dredging the Intracoastal Waterway. To be specific, the only shallow draft inlet funded was New River Inlet and that was almost surely at the request of the US Marines who use the access to the sea for training. But there were no funds included for the inlets at Carolina Beach, Lockwood Folly, Bogue Banks or Topsail Island. The waterway funds are just over $3 million dollars, up from last year, but still short of the $12 million needed to maintain minimum depth. The guess is that most of this ICW money will be spent from Morehead City north to facilitate barge traffic in the Edenton-Morehead City segment.

What this means is another “Perils of Pauline” scenario in which our legislators in Washington beg and bargain as the budget train barrels down the tracks. With a little luck our most vital projects are whisked from danger just in time, alive but just barely. As we all know, if the attitude of the administration remains unchanged, one of these years our beggars will come up empty-handed and we’ll be road kill.

In this regard it is relevant to note that there is also no money in the budget for the Wilmington Harbor Project. This, as you will remember from last month’s column, is an ambitious plan to widen and deepen 39 miles of the Cape Fear and Northeast Cape Fear channels leading to the State Ports and upstream to terminals north of Wilmington. This $467 million project is already well underway with several hundred million in state and federal dollars already expended. This year’s budget request was on the order of $20 million. Stopping or slowing it at this late date makes little fiscal or practical sense. Naturally, Congressman Mike McIntyre will be out there fighting for funds as he has done in the past, but it would be very discouraging to see something this far along—and this important to the economy of Southeastern North Carolina—stopped dead in its tracks.

One of the things several coastal groups worry about in this stressful situation is a rush by the state and some local communities to “solve” the problem. The concern is that the Feds will read these efforts to mean that they are off the hook and that we are ready to pick up their burden. As anyone regularly reading this magazine knows, it is my philosophical position that keeping the Waterway and the inlets open and the beaches nourished is primarily a federal responsibility. The waterway and the inlets are, with a few exceptions, open to all our citizens. The beaches are public in the largest sense of the word, and renourishment helps protect property from storms. When that property is devastated, the Feds pick up a share of the tab. Isn’t it prudent for them to put something into prevention?

Instead of rushing to fill the gap left by the withdrawal of federal funds, we should: (a) negotiate with as much muscle as we can bring to bear to get some long-term commitment in the Corps of Engineers budget for coastal projects; and (b) while those negotiations are going on, do some high-level contingency planning with the state and shore communities. At present there has been discussion about the state purchasing and operating its own fleet of dredges. Maybe this is a good idea, but it’s going to be expensive. Some local areas have stepped up and said that they would fund some specialized dredging projects. Dare County voters, on the other hand, just turned down by 70 percent to 30 percent, a modest sales tax increase to fund beach renourishment. What I can see coming is a hodgepodge of local reactions that might well send the wrong message. To be sure, when emergencies arise, local officials may have to react. But until we have exhausted all efforts in Washington and arrive at a comprehensive state response, it should be made clear that one-time emergency fixes are just that—not commitments for the future.

Turning now to the proposed new international port in Brunswick County—the Council of State has just approved the expenditure of $30 million dollars to purchase 600 acres of property on the banks of the Cape Fear River. The property is between Archer Daniels Midland and Sunny Point and belongs to Pfizer, not ADM as originally referenced. Whether the port is ever built or not, this seems like a prudent investment. However, it is also only prudent to note the shortfall in federal funds for current port projects. To pull off the mega-port, original estimates projected a considerable injection of dollars from Washington for dredging and other harbor improvements. Hmmm? I think I’d do some contingency planning here as well.

THE EXPLOSIVE GROWTH OF NORTH CAROLINA WINES
by Barbara Ensrud

North Carolina's young wine industry continues to be one of the fastest growing in the country. The number of wineries, fewer than a dozen six years ago, has jumped to 53. More than 350 growers, vintners, winemakers—and some who want to be—attended the NC Winegrowers Association (ncwinegrowers.org) annual meeting in Greensboro in February. The talks focused on the pursuit of quality and the importance of continuing to work together to forge a strong and creditable identity for North Carolina grapes and wine.

This industry is young and dynamic and well on its way, due to the energy, enthusiasm and dedication of the leading growers and winemakers. The greatest challenge here in North Carolina is weather. Autumn hurricanes can bring torrential rains that dilute flavors or affect ripening; mild winters fail to combat pests in the vineyard; sudden freezes or spring frosts can wipe out a crop during bud break; leafhoppers and birds can spread disease or consume a crop before it is harvested. Still, these hardy pioneers work to overcome the hazards... and increasingly make appealing wines that get better and more numerous with each vintage. It is gratifying to see more of them cropping up in wine shops, on restaurant wine lists and taking home awards in competition with wines from around the world.

Worth a Road Trip

Most North Carolina wineries welcome visitors and offer tasting and tours. Most are family operations that love to tell colorful stories of how they got into the amazing business of winegrowing. Picnic facilities are often available. Check Web sites or call for hours of operation. Below is a listing of the leading wineries producing wines from North Carolina vineyards and recommendations of some of their top wines. A complete list is available at the state Web site: www.ncwine.org. The Web site also includes a complete list of all medal winners for 2005.

Benjamin Vineyards
6516 Whitney Road, Graham, NC 27253
Ph. 336-376-1080 www.benjaminvineyards.com

This Alamance County winery grows muscadine, French hybrids and some vinifera.
Recommended: Scuppernong, Chambrunin

Biltmore Estate
One North Pack Square, Asheville, NC 28801.

North Carolina's largest winery, producing 130,000 cases of wine annually. It's important to know that Biltmore produces two lines of wines: Chateau Reserve wines, made from North Carolina-grown grapes, and the Biltmore Estate American series, excellent wines made from grapes imported from California and Washington. Winemaker Bernard Delille has greatly improved the quality of the American line in recent vintages; these wines are well worth trying again if you have had them recently.

Recommended: Chateau Reserve Blanc de Blancs sparkling wine, Chardonnay; Symmetry, Cabernet Franc

Crook's Corner, 610 West Franklin Street, Chapel Hill, 919-929-7643. Wine director Shannon Healy and crew have fashioned a lively list that complements southern favorites, with regular by-the-glass flights of special wines—such as the five or six dry rosés featured in summer. Try Sonoma-Cutrer’s 2003 Chardonnay ($6.50) with Chef Bill Smith’s delicately fried oysters, or the Drouhin ‘03 Pinot Noir ($7.75) with braised pork shank or sweetbreads.

Lantern, 423 Franklin Street, Chapel Hill, 919-960-2770. The Asian-inspired menu could not have a wine list better formulated to enhance the food. From the start, Elaine Thomas and Andrea Reusing selected a variety of fragrant, crisp whites that work superbly with the nuances of Lantern cuisine. There are 10 Rieslings on the list, dry ones from Austria; off-dry to lightly sweet ones from Germany’s varied regions; five Gruner Veltliner—the zestful dry Austrian white; Sauvignon Blancs, Viognier, Albarino, Chenin Blancs, Pinot Gris, several others and, oh yes, a token Chardonnay (never mind). Don’t overlook the well-chosen reds that work with dishes such as Pho (braised Black Angus), Tandoori-style lamb or pork shank. Check out the Italian Lagrein, juicy and smooth ($8.50/$37), the Austrian Zweigelt ($6.75/$29) or Saint-Joseph from the Rhône ($64). Good selection of beer and sake, too.

Other good Triangle wine lists that are fun to explore:

Bloomsbury Bistro, Raleigh 509 W. Whitaker Mill Road, 919-834-9011

Maximillian’s, Cary, 8314 Chapel Hill Road, 929-465-2463

Elaine’s on Franklin, Chapel Hill, 454 East Franklin Street, 919-960-2770

Daniel’s, Apex, 1430 NC 55, 919-303-1006

Nana’s Chophouse, Raleigh, 328 West Davie Street, 919-829-1212

Panzanella, Carrboro, Carr Mill Shops, Weaver & Greensboro, 919-929-0010

Provence, Carrboro, 203 West Weaver Street, 919-967-5008

Vin Rouge, Durham, 2010 Hillsborough Road, 919-416-0406

The Weathervane at A Southern Season, Chapel Hill, University Mall, 919-929-9466

The Cosmopolitan Grill, Cary, 103 Edinburgh South Drive, 919-380-1327

Starlu, Durham, Southcourt Bldg. 3211 Shannon Road, 919-489-1500
Upscale bistro boasts the culinary specialties of talented chef Jay Beaver and excellent wine selections by John Lambakis. Innovative choices by the glass include one of the hot little Minervois reds, Ch. Moulin à Vent ($8.50/$32), Domaine Serene Oregon Pinot Noir ($54). Great buy: Graham Beck Brut Rosé sparkling ($6/$28), a nifty aperitif.

Nasher Café. Duke Museum of Art, University Drive at Anderson St., Durham. Chef Amy Tornquist features locally grown and/or organic foods and wine at this sunny spot inside the Triangle’s new showplace for art on Duke’s west campus. Wonderful soups, unique sandwich creations and savory plate lunches are available with carefully chosen wines sold in 8 or 16 oz. carafes that admirably complement Chef Amy’s tasty offerings. Try the I Suri Barbera ($9) with the Smoked Tuna plate, or the German Riesling ($7) with Sopressata Pannini sandwich. The sun-drenched terrace is open, weather-permitting, another great place to spend time in adventurous sipping. Open till 8 p.m., Thursdays.

Tasca Brava. Sutton Station, Raleigh, 919-850-9080; Parkway Point, Cary, 919-319-3122. Tapas, Spain’s tradition of toothsome appetizers, hot and cold, has caught on big in the Triangle. Tasca Brava’s newest location on Falls of the Neuse, is developing its own following after success in Cary. The wine list’s selection of Spanish whites, dry rosados and flavor-packed reds is intriguing—many wines not found elsewhere hereabouts.

Longtime Favorites for Wine Lovers

Angus Barn, 9401 Glenwood Avenue, Raleigh, 919-981-2444. Can’t beat it for the breadth and depth of the wine list—whether it’s cult Cabernets from California, vertical vintages of top Bordeaux chateaux and stellar reds from Italy, Australia or the Rhône Valley. The rarer wines are expensive but fairly priced. What is surprising are some very good selections that don’t cost an arm and a leg, such as Trefethen’s 2002 Chardonnay (perfect now) ($41) a bottle, Bernardus 2000 Pinot Noir ($32), Brampton 2004 Viognier ($26). If there are six or eight of you, check out the large format selections. A magnum of 2000 Lucente (a junior SuperTuscan red) ($95), Sequoia Grove’s outstanding 1999 Napa Valley Cabernet ($120) or Chateau Montelena 2001 Cabernet ($218) are excellent value. The Barn presents several offerings by the glass, as well as a nice inventory of good North Carolina wines.

Magnolia Grill. 1002 Ninth Street, Durham, 919-286-3609. Ben Barker’s excellent and very fairly priced wine list, put together by the man himself, works superbly with Magnolia’s beautifully crafted foods. Since November, Ben notes, sales are running about 75-percent red. “Not really seasonal,” he says, since much of the menu offerings are fish and seafood. “People are just drinking more reds.” Still, the 2002 Erdener Kabinett Riesling ($36) would be delectable with grilled sea scallops in saffron-leek vinaigrette or with the grilled ribeye pork chop; and Jolivet’s 2004 Pouilly-Fumé ($36) with twice-baked grits soufflé. Scores of enticing reds, such as Terrazas Argentine Malbec ($32), Arzuaga Ribera del Duero from Spain ($44), to Plumpjack 2001 Cabernet ($125). Save room for one of Karen Barker’s heavenly desserts, such as the Dark Chocolate Clementine Cake paired with Quady Black Muscat “Elysium.”

Enoteca Vin. 410 Glenwood Avenue, Raleigh, 919-834-3070. As noted above, delightful surprises await at Enoteca Vin. You can drop a lot of bucks here—mostly by getting carried away with tempting choices offered by the taste (1.5 oz. or 3 oz.), for as little as $2 or as much as $22.50 (Batard-Montrachet, a fabulous white Burgundy). If you can manage that amount for 3 ounces, might as well team up with a friend or two and go for the bottle ($135). Heck, it retails for $80 or more and on most other wine lists costs more than $200. But you can drink extremely well here for considerably less.

Triangle Classics

The Triangle’s Classic Wine Lists include a broad variety of wine types, and depth in at least some of what are considered the world’s great wines from France, Italy, California, Spain, Australia and other select spots. Some are more innovative than others; some are quite expensive.

Triangle wine lists are more diverse, innovative and fun to explore than ever. As Carolinians become more adventurous—vinously speaking—wine lists reflect the trend. Of course, there are The Classics, restaurants with wine lists that offer the great traditions of the wine world—Bordeaux, Burgundy, top California Cabernets and Australian Shiraz—and with generous depth in many of them. (See box.)

Perusing wine lists this year, however, I found myself delighting in some of the newer nosheries, large and small, casual or grand. And at more established places, updated lists closely geared to the dishes on the menu and special wine events, offer plenty of dining excitement. You can really enjoy experimenting at some of the restaurants around here because with the best lists, you can't go wrong—and sometimes you'll make great discoveries by venturing outside something you already know.

On a recent evening I was in Raleigh around six-ish, expected for dinner with friends at eight, so with a little time on my hands, I popped into Enoteca Vin to have a glass of wine and look again at their excellent list. Surprise! That night they were offering a red Burgundy flight for tasting, and I am a Burgundy lover. For $15 I tried tasting portions of three terrific wines: G. Jordan 2003 Côte de Nuits-Villages, aromatic, full-bodied, great cherry flavors; F. Magnien 2002 Morey-St.-Denis, smooth, juicy, the very essence of cherry; and M. Magnien '02 Gevrey-Chambertin, big and earthy with cherry bark flavors. With the wines I ordered a small cheese plate—Hinman Farm aged goat cheese, served with a generous handful of dried cherries! An inspired match-up, but entirely serendipitous. Yet it's the kind of thing that can happen at Vin. Bottle prices, by the way: $55, $65 and $75, respectively, actually quite good prices considering what they go for in wine shops.

Here are a few places—some new, some familiar, some expensive, others moderate. Most are casual, where exploring the wine list can be tasty fun as well as instructive. We'll start with some newer spots.

Bin 54, 1201 Raleigh Road (Hwy 54), Chapel Hill, 919-969-1145. The Triangle's newest steak house is sleek and handsome, already a hit. Manager and wine maven Brett Davis has put together a terrific (and expensive) list to complement not only impressive beef, but also seafood and delectable sides (hefty enough for vegetarians). Try the Dutton-Goldfield Pinot Noir ($64) with salmon or big-eye tuna. Dozens of meaty teds can complement aged beef, venison or veal chop, from excellent Argentine Malbec ($48) to Pertimali Brunello di Montalcino ($104), Joseph Phelps Insignia '01 ($180) or Chateau Margaux ($265). Take advantage of the variety of elegant decanters to aerate young big reds (no extra charge!).

Jujube, Glen Lennox, Hwy 54 (off 15-501), 919-960-0555. Now here's a place to while away a late afternoon or evening dazzling your palate with Asian fusion delicacies, many with savory but refined Vietnamese accents—and intriguing wines. Chef Charlie Deal is into wine as he is the food, so the list abounds with interesting—and affordable—choices. Don't miss the Vietnamese Salad Roll appetizer—pair it with a glass of dry Spanish Rueda ($6/$21 a bottle); or the fragrant Santa Julia Torrontes ($5/$18). For the Niman Ranch roast pork, try the Steele Blue Franc Lemberger ($7/$27). There are several vegetarian and wheat-free dishes—or braised short ribs for carnivores—that call for hearty reds such as Domaine Pallières Gigondas ($38), Australian Dog Ridge Cadenza ($41) or Spain's Pucho Bierzo ($26). With exotic desserts and dessert wines, esoteric sakes are catching on too.

take these restaurants “to the next level [of quality and consistency]” by building teamwork among the staffs.

Ray’s plan is working. As we left Bin, the waiter commented, “I’ve worked in restaurants for 20 years and this is by far the best experience I’ve had. People here really do care about their customers and the quality of their work.”

WALTER ROYAL
The Angus Barn

Those familiar with Walter Royal would probably describe him as more of an old-timer than an up-and-comer. Already the award-winning executive chef of North Carolina’s best-known restaurant, how much farther can Walter’s star rise?

Before landing at the Barn almost a decade ago, Royal studied with Nathalie Dupree in Atlanta, then worked up from the ranks in Triangle kitchens. Pyewacket, Fearrington House, and his own New-Orleans-style restaurant in Durham were stops on the way to his present position. Just a few accolades from his tenure there include Restaurant Guild International Best Chef of the Year, James Beard Rising Star, and Top Black Chef in America.

But Royal’s star is ascending even higher. As I write, he is in New York to compete with the likes of Bobby Flay and Mario Batali on Food Network’s hit show Iron Chef. Will Royal become the next Iron Chef? The invitation itself is an honor bestowed upon the best cooks in the country. Royal is one of only two Southern chefs invited to the competition in 2006. He’s our man! And when the show airs, win or lose, the whole state will be cheering for Royal.

AMYTORNQUIST
The Nasher Cafe and Sage & Swift Catering

You may not know her name, but legions of Metro readers have tasted her food. Amy Tornquist, owner of Sage and Swift Gourmet Catering has been responsible for some of the best food served at glittering social events throughout the Triangle since 1993.

Born and raised in Durham, Tornquist enrolled at UNC to pursue an academic career but her love for good food propelled her to a part-time job at Crook’s Corner in 1986. Recognizing her talent, the late chef Bill Neal encouraged Tornquist to travel to France for further training. So successful was she at La Varenne Ecole de Cuisine that the school’s owner, Ann Willan, recommended Tornquist for the private chef position at the British Embassy. A year later, Tornquist joined some of the most talented young chefs in France at Duquesnoy, one of Paris’ most prestigious restaurants.

Missing her Southern roots, she returned to Durham and started a catering company that, after over a decade, has blossomed into one of the most prestigious in the state. Sage and Swift now occupies its own building on two acres in Durham with plenty of space to grow herbs and produce. The company runs the buffer at Duke’s Faculty Commons as well as the new Nasher Museum Café.

Though she describes her own brand of cooking “Southern seasonal,” Tornquist credits much of her success to lessons learned in France. “What differentiates one restaurant or caterer from the next is the length the kitchen goes to procure the best ingredients.” Tornquist puts her money where her mouth is and practices “cuisine du marché” (market-based cooking). “I hate to print a menu ahead of time,” she admits. “We create menus around the best produce that our farmers bring us, and it can be unpredictable.”

What’s ahead for Tornquist in 2006? After having a feature in Food and Wine this coming spring, she will teach a class at A Southern Season based on her quick and easy recipes from the issue. Her secret desire, and next project, is to open taco stands in Durham using all fresh ingredients. “I have several Mexican-American employees that have been loyal to me over the years. I’d like to give back to them something to create from their own culture.”

DALE RAY
Bin 54

Most of the buzz surrounding Jujube, Grasshopper and Bin 54 has been focused on the ever-stellar George Bakatsias, and newcomers Charlie Deal, the original chef of Grasshopper and Jujube, and Brett Davis, manager of Bin. Meanwhile Dale Ray has been quietly tending his business running the kitchen at Bin and building a team of cooks who put out some of the finest food in the state.

A big, burly Russell Crowe look-alike, Ray’s rugged appearance belies his delicate touch. Though main courses at Bin come unadorned, his appetizers (e.g. one whole foie gras on three perfectly sliced pears and topped with a single stem of fresh thyme) are picture-perfect.

Ray’s cooking style has evolved from his apprenticeship in the country’s best restaurants—Charlie Trotter’s in Chicago, Citronelle in L.A., Citrus in Washington, to name a few. “The best experience of my life,” Ray claimed, “was working with Patrick O’Connell at The Inn at Little Washington. Every week we would sit down and discuss ideas, a different concept entirely from the autocratic kitchens of some of the French chefs I’ve worked with. From O’Connell I learned a leadership style that works for me. It’s all about building your staff’s enthusiasm for the restaurant.”

Born and raised in Durham, Ray’s passion for cooking was aroused while working at Paizade where Bakatsias inspired him to put his heart and soul into the work. Ray has been tapped to become food and beverage manager of all Bakatsias restaurants while maintaining control of Bin’s kitchen. His goal is to
When it comes to talented professional cooks, we have an embarrassment of riches here in the Metro area. The ones showcased here are all rising stars, though one could argue that some have been stellar for years. What these five chefs share is a combination of ability, ambition and energy that compels each to test him or herself continually. They are all risk takers, and they all have something up their sleeves for the near future. Metro foodies can look forward to being a part of these plans.

JAY BEAVER

Frazier's

Why would an ambitious, talented young chef leave Café Boulud, one of the most highly esteemed kitchens in New York, for a small neighborhood bistro on Hillsborough Street? What else but true love—Beaver followed his wife when she took a job at a Research Triangle Park pharmaceutical company. But he sensed the Triangle dining scene was ready for his kind of cooking, having worked with John Toler at Bloomsbury Bistro seven years earlier.

I've heard nothing but the highest compliments for Frazier's under the realm of previous chef Jeremy Sabo (soon to grace us again with his cooking at Vivace), yet I never had the pleasure of dining there until recently when I tasted Beaver's fresh foie gras. Served with three different fig renditions mirrored by three treatments of scallions, this was a tour de force I'll never forget. Only since my last meal at New York's Gramercy Tavern have I encountered such an ambitious creation, perfect in every detail. As it turns out, Beaver spent two years there as sous chef.

A recent meal at Frazier's (Celery Root Soup with Jerusalem Artichokes, Raviolo of Braised Lamb Shoulder, and Roasted Grouper with Roasted Winter Squash and Amaretto-Sage Fumet) confirmed that Beaver is one of the most talented chefs in North Carolina.

This summer Beaver will give away some of his secrets when teaching cooking lessons at the new state-of-the-art open kitchen at Vivace. Guests will then dine on the 3-course meal following the class, with wines paired.

Those who miss the lessons can catch him on TV. “Carolina Cooking” will feature this rising star in three segments later this year.

ASHLEY CHRISTENSEN

Enoteca Vin and The Raleigh Times Bar

Ashley Christensen has appeared more than once in this column. What can I say? The woman just keeps on moving and shaking. Now a partner at Enoteca Vin, she has been recruited by Greg Hatem of Empire Properties to help create two new downtown venues.

By early March, her latest collaboration with Hatem should be open for business. Located in the old Raleigh Times Building, the Raleigh Times Bar will offer more than cocktails. The concept is “gastropub” and with Christensen in charge of developing the menu, we can expect unusual and irresistible bar food.

As soon as the bar opens, Christensen will move on to the Heilig-Levine Building on East Hargett Street where she plans a “soul food” restaurant whose working title is “The Kitchen.” Projected opening date is September. Metro will keep you posted.
