INTRODUCING
A DARKER, BOLDER SPICED RUM
A sure-fire conversation starter for the holidays is the Raleigh Call, a fragment of information indicating Lee Harvey Oswald attempted to place a call to Raleigh from the Dallas City Jail the night before he was shot by Jack Ruby. The event went unheeded until 1980 when writer Grover Proctor and I investigated the call for the weekly Spectator where I served as editor and publisher. Next year marks the 50th anniversary of the events in Dallas that changed the course of history, an appropriate demarcation to take another look at this intriguing piece of the assassination puzzle.

Take a visitor to a tall building to view the area and all you see are clumps of trees. That's the beauty of the place, pastoral views containing modern buildings, world class medical complexes, high-tech and bio-tech facilities, attractive shopping options - and beautiful homes. Diane Lea trekked out past Hillsborough and discovered an excellent example of residential high culture snuggled into acres of rolling woodlands where art, furniture, architecture and location create a unique and stylish expression of the meaning of home.

Taylor Arnold talks with Corbett Monica, the winner of the annual chefs competition held during the Raleigh Roundup fundraiser for the American Cancer Society. Emily Conser speaks with the founder of the meteoric Peter Millar fashion label founded and operating right here in the Triangle. Louis St. Lewis donned his favorite finery to attend two high-tone fundraisers, and previews his one-man exhibition coming up in February. Carroll Leggett remembers our nation's capital when cordiality and compromise ruled, and Jim Hughes comments on the new Master Plan for Research Triangle Park.

It's the time of year to consider spas and resorts, as well ski destinations. Check out Metro's detailed guides to all you need to know - and don't forget the last-minute presents available in our second seasonal Gift Guide. On the Town covers the social scene and you can rely on Preview, Secrets of State and My Usual Charming Self to serve up timely news and opinion you won't find anywhere else.

Tar Heel Treasures: Books For The Holidays

Books about North Carolina are always an enduring gift for the holidays.

Suitable for display on the coffee table, featuring beautiful photos accompanied by interesting narrative, is author Lee Pace's latest contribution to the story of Pinehurst, "the home of golf in America." This time Pace focuses exclusively on the complete history of the fabled #2 course, considered Donald Ross's masterpiece. The course was restored to its original layout by golf course architects Ben Crenshaw and Bill Coore in 2011, removing decades of grass growth obscuring Ross's sandy "links" concept. Now #2 has come full circle and Pace takes readers all the way down the fairway in The Golden Age of Pinehurst: The Story of the Rebirth of No.2, published by UNC Press.

The Cape Fear River holds a prominent position in the story of North Carolina, overflowing with cultural, environmental and political history. Now novelist Philip Gerard - accompanied by a crew of experts - relates the saga of the Cape Fear, considered Donald Ross’s masterpiece. Down the Wild Cape Fear is published by UNC Press.

Love letters with a twist comprise Dearest Palmetto by Cary, NC physician William Matlock Stocks, serving up penetrating revelations of life in the North Carolina in the early years of the 20th century. To obtain a copy, contact the author: 112 Buckden Place, Cary, NC.

The Dynamic Decade: Creating the Sustainable Campus for the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, 2001-2001 - a coffee table book that may as well have legs of its own - is available from UNC Press, written by David R. Godschalk of UNC's City and Regional Planning Department and Jonathan Howes, a former director of the UNC Center for Urban and Regional Studies. The book is expensively produced on fine paper and features classy color images that chronicle the building boom of the 2000s funded by a gigantic bond issue that unleashed bulldozers and construction crews throughout the Chapel Hill campus, quite literally "making over" the 200-year-old university footprint. Obviously there was plenty of money leftover to pay for the production of this expensive but attractive tome. MM

Raleigh’s Allen Weiss To Produce Holocaust Documentary

Raleigh filmmaker Allen Weiss is working on a documentary entitled "Six Million Minus One" that explores a little known brick in the wall surrounding Holocaust survivors: the effect their history has on their children and grandchildren.

As the son of a survivor, Weiss wants his documentary to answer the question, "What is it like growing up in a household with this incredible reality always present, even if seldom voiced?" Weiss added: "My daughters know more about my father's experiences than I ever did growing up. We simply didn’t talk about it. No one said my brother and I couldn’t ask questions, we just didn’t. I don’t know why we didn’t, but I’ve learned that’s very common among children of survivors."

A Public Service Announcement Weiss created for the N.C. Council on the Holocaust featuring survivors and their families in the Raleigh area is titled "Number 89444," referring to the number the Nazis tattooed on his father's arm in the Dachau death camp in Germany. Said Weiss, "the point behind the piece was to remind the public that Holocaust victims are more than numbers. They have names."

Moving Midway On UNC-TV

UNC-TV will rebroadcast Moving Midway on Thursday, December 27 at 9:30 p.m. The documentary film by Godfrey Cheshire received rave reviews from The New York Times, New York Magazine, the LA Times, Variety and Roger Ebert's syndicated film column.

The story of 18th century Midway Plantation, outside Raleigh near Knightdale - that was physically relocated to avoid demolition in 2007 - is rich in Southern traditions, but also serves as a symbol of the New South where the past collides with modern attitudes with surprising results. Go to www.movingmidway.com to learn more and to order the DVD.

Raleigh Call Mystery
by Bernie Reeves

In 2012, America will mark the 50th anniversary of the assassination of John F. Kennedy on November 22, 1963 in Dallas, Texas. The course of history was altered, yet what really happened remains controversial today. Metro Magazine editor Bernie Reeves remembers his involvement in an obscure event that could hold the key to solving the case.

In November, the Indy Week of Durham published a feature story on the Raleigh Call, an attempt by Lee Harvey Oswald to call a John D. Hurt in Raleigh, NC from the Dallas Police and Courts Building on the night of Saturday, November 23, 1963.

The next morning Oswald was shot and killed by gangster Jack Ruby while being transferred to the Dallas County Jail. But the telephone slip with the number he tried to call has survived, an intriguing piece of flotsam that continues to bob around in the murky waters of conspiracy theories 50 years later.

Two switchboard operators were on duty the evening of November 23, 1963 (one going off and one coming on duty) when a "government man" informed them Oswald was going to make a long distance call and to inform him before connecting. At around 10:45 p.m., Oswald was on the line and gave one of the operators a number in the 919 area code. As instructed, the "government man" was informed. He said to the operator, "Tell Mr. Oswald his call did not go through."

Oswald was then told, "I'm sorry the number didn't answer" and disconnected. The slip of paper with the Raleigh number was later retrieved from the waste paper basket and copied by one of the operators to keep "as a souvenir." The "government man" has not been identified.

The ensuing Warren Commission report omitted mention of the attempted call, as did the explosion of conspiracy theories that gripped the country. A Freedom of Information request by a Chicago researcher uncovered the incident in 1970, but there was scant interest in what was then interpreted as an incoming crank call.

In 1980, I was editor and publisher of the weekly Raleigh Spectator. In those days I was a subscriber to the New York Review of Books that published a review of the pre-publication galley "proof" of the upcoming book Conspiracy by British author Anthony Summers which briefly mentioned the Raleigh Call. That hit home. I engaged contributing Spectator writer Grover B. Proctor, who kept up with the theories surrounding the assassination, to investigate the call. Spectator published the first news accounts of the alleged incident in two installments in the July 17 and 24, 1980 issues.

Proctor and I called several sources to ascertain the validity of the call, including Robert Blakey, chief counsel for the 1978 House Assassinations Committee investigating the John F. Kennedy killing. Blakey told us, "The call apparently is real and it goes out; it does not come in. That's the sum and substance of it. It was an outgoing call, and therefore I consider it very troublesome material. The direction in which it went was deeply disturbing."

Victor Marchetti, whose The CIA and the Cult of Intelligence was the first book in U.S. history to be subjected to prior government censorship (the redacted portions are left blank and labeled deleted), told us that the Raleigh Call was connected to espionage and black op tradecraft. In essence, Marchetti hypothesized that Oswald, a former Marine, could have been associated with the Office of Naval Intelligence. In the 1950s, the ONI routinely trained operatives to display pro-communist sympathies, then visit the USSR where the KGB was likely to recruit and "double" the agent to work for them. In most cases, the U.S. would then "triple" the agents back into the foal.
In this scenario, Oswald, who did not hide his advocacy of Marxism to his fellow Marines, did end up in Soviet Russia, where he married the niece of a KGB officer before returning to the U.S. Plausibly then, Oswald could have thought he was working for a legitimate operation comprised of intelligence operatives, members of organized crime (the CIA contracted with Mafia members - who detested the Kennedy administration - to attempt to assassinate Fidel Castro) and anti-Castro Cubans still stinging with anger at the Kennedy brothers for refusing to provide air cover for the ill-fated Bay of Pigs invasion. The CIA, who trained the anti-Castro Cubans to invade Cuba, also felt betrayed by the Kennedys, adding another layer of motive by some members of the intelligence community.

If Oswald was duped into thinking he was working for a valid and patriotic cabal who felt JFK had to be removed, he would be sure he had a middle man to call - a "cut-out" in spy craft parlance - if the operation went wrong. And that was Marchetti's main point. In his opinion, John Hurt in Raleigh was a "fake cut-out." In this view, Oswald followed instructions, unaware he was being set up.

To add credence to the intelligence "fingerprints" in the assassination, Ion Pacepa, chief of the Romanian spy agency before defecting to the U.S. in the mid-1980s, has written the book Programmed To Kill that maintains the JFK hit was organized and implemented by the Soviet KGB, pointing to the similarities to other "wet jobs" (as assassination was labeled by the Soviets) carried out by the world's most notorious espionage organization.

Telephone Tapped

A call to John Hurt by us in 1980 elicited denials. The only suspicious connection to the killing was his service as a counterintelligence operative in World War II. Of course Hurt would not answer truthfully if he was indeed a real "cut-out," and anyway the scenario Marchetti laid out had Hurt as a fake to serve as validation to Oswald that he was engaged in a sanctioned hit. That Hurt had an intelligence background would add credence of his bona fides to Oswald.

As the Spectator investigation was underway with calls made to informed sources, often at night - including to Marchetti, who is under an injunction to clear any mention of intelligence matters with the CIA or risk criminal contempt of court - the receptionist walked in after three days had passed to tell me she had received a mysterious telephone call at exactly 10 a.m. every morning that week. She said the phone would ring; she would answer, but no one spoke on the other end of the line. Then, she said, she heard a clicking noise, followed by a hang up.

She had no idea what Proctor and I were up to, so the regularity and repetition of the call was noteworthy, especially in light of connection problems occurring during our telephone calls. Experiencing a frisson of anxiety, but averse to thinking what we were doing merited dramatic action such as a wire tap, I waited until the next morning before acting. Sure enough the same call to Spectator came in right on time at 10 a.m.

I asked a judge for a name of a reliable and respected private detective and called him in. He listened and said he would look into our suspicions and report in later. And he did. "What in the hell are you up to?" he asked. "You are being tapped from Bell South central office. That requires a federal court order."

He explained the call each morning was to reset a tape recorder (this was 1980, don't forget). The call was to make a new connection to our number. The click the receptionist heard was a new tape cutting on for another 24-hour tap.

Stop the Presses

The first installment of Grover Proctor's piece was ready to go at the printer when I received a call from a colleague telling me the 11 p.m. radio news included a story that the Raleigh daily News & Observer coming out in the morning with a breaking story on the so-called Raleigh Call. In the issue the week before we published our investigation, I mentioned in Spectator we were coming out the next week with an exclusive on the call in order to stake out our provenance for the story. I sped to the newspaper office that evening and charged into the newsroom, yelling one of the world's greatest cliches, "stop the presses," while grabbing the phone off the managing editor's desk to call a well-known attorney. I said they were stealing our story. Alas, the presses didn't stop. But in the evening Raleigh Times, also owned by the morning paper, the revised news story gave Spectator proper credit.

Message From the Grave

In 2004, a Raleigh lawyer stopped me and said he was the attorney for Mrs. John Hurt, who died around that time (John Hurt died in the mid-1980s). He told me Mrs. Hurt told him she talked with Oswald on the telephone. I said please provide me with an affidavit—or simply a letter, even an email—verifying what you are telling me. He said client confidentiality prevented him.

But there is a problem in what the attorney told me. If Oswald's call from Dallas was cut off, how did Mrs. Hurt talk with him? Perhaps Oswald acted as any trained agent would do. He verified his "cut-out" before the operation to kill Kennedy. He called the Hurt apartment in Raleigh, spoke with Mrs. Hurt and then to John Hurt to be sure he would be on hand for a call if necessary.

Today, nearly 80 percent of Americans believe that Oswald did not act alone, either because of the deluge of books, documentaries and films maintaining the shooting was a conspiracy of several people—or because common sense tells them the accepted evidence rules out the "lone gunman" theory, even though several respected researchers cling to the Warren Commission's original conclusion.

Fifty years after the assassination, The Raleigh Call remains a dangling thread that could unravel the mystery and controversy surrounding one of history's greatest unsolved murders. Yet the call continues to languish in obscurity, untouched by investigators who have neither disproved its validity nor mined its significance.

(Grover Proctor, the author of the Raleigh Call articles published by the Spectator in July 1980, has combined the main points in a summary available by going to http://groverproctor.us/jfk/jfk80.html. The Spectator archives are yet to be digitized, but back issues can be viewed at the UNC Library's North Carolina Collection and the Wake County Library).
RTP Looks to the Future

The Research Triangle Park - with 41,000 employees occupying 25 million square feet in facilities spread over 7000 acres located between Raleigh, Durham and Chapel Hill - is the engine that drives the region. Today, RTP has embarked on a mission to re-imagine the world famous research campus in reaction to modern trends that run counter to the original concept that dates back to the 1950s. In those days the goal was to offer an academic campus atmosphere where scientists worked in splendid isolation. Tenants were required to build on 15 percent of their property, causing tenants to seem distant and inaccessible to the public – and to their neighbors within the Park.

Today, the fast charging players in the world of research seek a less sequestered work environment that allows scientists and technicians to touch elbows and share ideas over coffee, meals, seminars and social events. Touted as the largest research park in the world, and the respected model in the genre, RTP has discovered time and events have passed it by. That's why the RTP Foundation Board launched the Pathways to Opportunities Bus Tour for two weeks in November - to reach out across the state and re-connect with the partners that helped made the original concept work. (See sidebar by Jim Hughes, and go to www.metronc.com/article/?id=2219 to read his March, 2011 essay on RTP in Metro suggesting that RTP needed a new plan for the future).

Coming soon is the unveiling of a new Master Plan that will apply rezoning to create a more flexible and lively critical mass of buildings, restaurants and residential facilities – a feature disallowed in the original RTP charter. The hope is not only to re-engineer the Park to meet new demands by owners and employees to create an atmosphere of accessibility, but to add 58 million new square feet of research and office space and 150,000 new Park jobs.

— Bernie Reeves
I grew up in Durham in the 1950s not far from Lowe’s Grove, the little farm community where Greensboro engineer and MIT graduate Rome Guest and the Pinelands Corporation began the assembly of the land that became Research Triangle Park. I went to high school with kids whose parents and grandparents sold him the land. I shot squirrels and drove out there as a teenager. I watched the Park grow from an improbable vision into a job-creating dynamo that transformed the whole region. And for the last 20 years or so, I’ve watched it struggle through a sad decline, the victim of complacency and a series of myopic executives who couldn’t see past their next paycheck.

The new plan and the bus tour to promote it that set out in November are steps in the right direction. Reconnecting with the rest of the state is long overdue. But reviving the Park and assuring its future will take a whole lot more than just a high-priced PR blitz.

The message needs to go out to the leaders of our academic institutions and the surrounding cities and towns. They need to remember that the Park is the main reason behind the emergence of this region as a world-class center of research and innovation. The fact is, without the Park, none of what we have today would have been possible.

Fixing the Park must start by going back to the vision and spirit that created it in the first place. Former Governor Luther Hodges said it best in Businessman in the Statehouse, the book he wrote after leaving office in 1960. The Park, he said, ”is the marriage of North Carolina’s ideals for higher education and its hopes for material progress.”

When Guest’s original idea went under, Hodges brought together leaders from private enterprise, academia and government to see that it did not die. The result was the best example ever seen of a public-private partnership that actually worked. It’s our turn now. It would be the height of ingratitude to men like Hodges and Bill Friday and Robert Hanes and Archie Davis and Professor William Little and a host of others if we do not step in and put the Park back on track.

Post-Modernist Home Defined by Artistic Adventure

by Diane Lea

Photography by Ted Bartlett
Provided by North Carolina Estates
A few exits west of Chapel Hill along Interstate Highway I-40, a lovely road winds through pastures and cornfields set with thick stands of pines and hardwoods. A few more turns finds the traveler beneath a tree canopy with occasional glimpses of homes ensconced in gracious rural settings. At the end of the journey, welcoming wrought iron gates open to a drive accented by scarlet and gold Japanese maple cultivars, leading us to a private world of architecture and art situated gracefully among eight acres of extraordinary natural beauty.

The home is a quietly elegant tribute to postmodernist architecture, designed by one of North Carolina’s preeminent architectural firms, Charlotte-based Meyer Greeson Paulin Benson, and constructed in 1988 by Durham Potter of Raleigh. An expansive columned gallery serves as the entrance to the home through tall transomed doors and a semi-circular marble-floored foyer set with tall arched art niches.

First Impressions

The scale of the foyer is suitable for one of the owners’ prized art objects, recently returned from loan to the North Carolina Museum of Art. A massive pale ash grey clay sculpture, “Pa’l Cielo,” by Cristina Cordova, an artisan known for stretching the parameters of her craft, seems to view the visitor with aloof calmness. The woman of the house, an accomplished weaver and long time board member of North Carolina’s Penland School of Crafts, met Cordova at the school where she and husband Pablo Soto, a glass artist, reside. The Cordova sculpture is only one of several pieces the couple has commissioned from artists whose work they admired. They almost always visit the artists in their studios, or have the artist visit them on site, to discuss a proposed concept and the space planned for the piece. To purchase the piece, they work through the gallery representing the artist.

Beyond the foyer is a spectacular interior sky lit loggia that rises 30 feet and forms the organizing axis of the main floor, delineating a living area on the left and dining area on the right. The focal point of the loggia is a striking piece of fiber art, “Lost Images,” by the Columbian textile artist Olga de Amaral. The owners discovered her during a visit to Bellas Arts in Santa Fe. In making the piece, linen strips were woven, gessoed, painted...
An open floor plan enhances the enjoyment of furnishings and art collected while living in various parts of the United States and abroad.

and then plated with gold, silver, or copper, a very intricate and time consuming process. The work holds pride of place on a long wall leading to the master living area and to stairs to a lower level. It is situated perfectly above an antique Chinese scroll bench of richly toned wood with gold striations.

Furnishings Reflect Global Interests

The home’s living area offers another aspect of the couples’ collecting interests—furniture. The room’s open plan allows for the arrangement of several classic Mies van der Rohe Barcelona chairs and lounges in warm browns and camel colored leather. A legged cabinet with sliding doors stands against one wall, commissioned from the Danish Cabinet Maker’s Guild when the owners were on sabbatical at the Karolinska Institute in Stockholm, Sweden.
"Occurrence," by artist John McQueen is composed of willow strips held in place with wax linen ties stapled to the wall.
International scientists lived in the Wenner-Gren Center, where each unit was designed and furnished by Scandinavian architects and artisans. The experience led to an increased appreciation of Scandinavian design.

Porcelain pieces by Triangle artist Sally Prange and Chicago artist Ruth Duckworth, both now deceased, are displayed on a cabinet. “Self Portrait,” a dramatic image in blacks and greys composed by the artist Chuck Close, occupies space on the living room wall. The features in the portrait are created by paper pulp dropped on to handmade paper.

A standing desk, positioned against a living room wall, is the work of Wendell Castle, commissioned following a visit to the artist's studio in Rochester, New York. The upper body of the desk is of irregularly patterned pommele, an African mahogany. The edges were painted and then lacquered to create a distinctive patterned surface. The legs and stand are metal. Above the desk floats another Cordova creation.

The Art of the Matter

Although the owners did not build the house, its many distinctive features provide for placement of their art and objects in an uncluttered manner. The living room is adjacent to a sculptural mahogany bar. At one end of the bar island is a Sean Scully wood block print. The colors are arranged in a geometric pattern and accented with fine black lines, creating a sense of extension of the wood beneath. A Robert Motherwell oil painting, “The Old Man and the Sea,” frames the other end of the bar.

Motherwell is among the artists who studied and taught at the experimental Black Mountain College, established in 1933 in Black Mountain, North Carolina. Based on the philosophy that the study of art was essential to a liberal arts education, the school attracted many notable artists, writers, architects and performance artists, among them Josef and Anni Albers, John Cage, Merce Cunningham, Willem de Kooning, Franz Kline, Jacob Lawrence, Peter Voulkos, Walter Gropius, Charles Olson and Buckminster Fuller. The couple became interested in Black Mountain College and the impact it had on the artists who taught and studied there. Although the school existed for slightly less than 30 years, it had an enormous impact on the art movement in the United States and Europe. Over time the owners acquired several pieces by artists and craftsmen associated with Black Mountain College, including the work of ceramicists Peter Volos and Karen Karnes and the painter Kenneth Noland, a native of Asheville.

The couple purchases art only if they both like it. There are three items in their collection, however, that were purchased as a birthday gift. Perhaps the most fascinating of is “Occurrence” by innovative basket and fiber art artist John McQueen. The piece is made of willow strips held in place with wax linen ties stapled to the wall in the home’s lower level. The work is a narrative of life events important to the artist and was originally created for the Illinois State Museum’s Lockport Gallery.
Another Cristina Cordova sculpture floats above a standing desk by Wendell Castle, a Rochester, New York based artisan.

Also on the lower level is a weaving room the lady of the house jokingly calls her lifetime supply of yarn. To one side is a Cranbrook loom, originally designed and created for Michigan's Cranbrook Academy of Art, established in 1932 and headed for a time by Eliel Saarinen. A smaller loom sits by a cutting table.

Visitors depart the house through a stand of maples and conifers, an element of the substantial landscape renovation that the owners undertook shortly after purchasing the property. At the end of the day, the afternoon sun sets the Japanese maples aglow.

The home's furnishings, fine collections and setting are a testament to a remarkable adventure in art, architecture and nature.

IN STEP WITH CHRIS KNOTT, FOUNDER OF PETER MILLAR

"Current but not modern, classic but not traditional, on trend but not trendy." These are a few of the characteristics that Chris Knott, founder of Raleigh-based Peter Millar, says sets apart his classic lifestyle brand. And they work. Launched in 2001, the company has exploded into the luxury golf apparel market in just over 10 years.

Knott began his career in retail in his hometown of Fuquay-Varina. His work as a rep for high-end brands Burberry and Joseph Abboud provided the experience that prepared him for this career in menswear — and ultimately inspired him to start Peter Millar. "I realized that I needed to start a company to build a brand that I could control," he says. And that is just what he did.

As an avid golfer, Knott realized that there was a disconnect between golfing attire and every day wear. He wanted the Peter Millar man to be just as stylish as he was comfortable, and he believed one should not suffer for the other. The result is a collection that effortlessly transitions from a round of 18 to an evening out with friends. The brand also offers men's and women's apparel, shoes, accessories and a collegiate collection.

Looking ahead, Knott says they are hoping to continue their exclusive distribution to Neiman- Marcus and Nordstrom, as well as high-end specialty stores and private resorts and clubs. And with more and more pro golfers sporting the brand, Peter Millar is making an impression on golf courses everywhere.

Today, Peter Millar's full apparel collection and accessories are featured at men's clothing stores and departments and area golf club pro shops. For more information, visit www.petermillar.com.

THE DRAMA OF IT ALL

Drama! Some people say they are not about drama. But I must admit that I am, and always have been. Must be one of the reasons that I love opera so much. All I need for a good day in the studio is a couple of bottles of decent champagne and Maria Callas blasting on the sound system. Along with a little incense and a few friends chattering in the background makes passing time much more pleasurable. So of course I was delighted when Ms. Betsy Levitas of the North Carolina Opera invited me to their gala recently at The Ballroom at the Umstead Hotel and Spa (www.ncopera.org).

Since the gala was sold out, I was actually only invited to the cocktail party — until my friend’s architect Doug Brinkley of Pearce Brinkley Cease & Lee, along with opera fan Worth Dunn III, pulled some strings and snagged me a seat for dinner. I was lucky enough to sit at the same table as North Carolina Opera artistic director and principal conductor Timothy Myers, as well as a slew of swell guys and gals, such as my dinner companion Mary Ann Mills, who had zoomed down from Georgetown for the event and was serving up Jacqueline Kennedy realness all night long. What a great night! Fantastic music, great food that bordered on the sublime (rare for a gala) and beautiful people (shout out to Mrs. Jodi Pagano, wife of Dr. Joe Pagano, who was delicious in champagne silk). Yours truly was a little understated, wearing my silver-sequined dinner jacket and rhinestone eye patch. I call it my “disco assassin” look. It made enough of an impression on the soloist that she made a bee line over to me after her stellar performance to compliment me on my “wattage” that she noticed from the stage. So lovely to be appreciated! Hats off to Dr. John Reynolds, chair of this year’s Jupiter Ball, Morehead Planetarium director Todd Boyette and Ms. Terry Gunnels (who deserves a raise for everything she does) for turning it OUT for the event this year. They raise money for science scholarships and it is always one of my very favorite events (www.moreheadplanetarium.org). I wore a vintage 1940s double breasted tux for the event to serve up old school style and wound up luckily sitting next to the wonderful Lenora Evans, executive director of the Frankie Lemmon Foundation (www.frankielemmonschool.org) who was a trip-and-a-half and so much fun. Dr. Betsy Bennett, ruler of the NC Museum of Natural Sciences for decades was the guest speaker and kept the crowd enraptured. It might have helped that a gent at our table raided his noted wine cellar just for our table: the devil IS in the details. Oh, whoever did the large-scale flowers at the event was a GENIUS. Metro readers, I want each and every one of you to make a special note on your calendars for this coming February. Even though I exhibit nationally and internationally, for some reason here in the Triangle some people think that I am just a writer. I guess it is because this is a fairly small pond and if you don’t slap the surface with your tail every five minutes like a beaver they tend to forget about you. Well, after many years of exile from the Raleigh art scene, yours truly is going to be the solo artist for the February exhibition at Flanders Gallery in Raleigh (www.flandersartgallery.com). Ms. Kelly Flanders McChesney and Ms. Marjorie Hodges have enough faith in me that they are letting me loose to take over the space and transform it. The theme? “Orpheus in the Underworld.”

Orpheus was the most famous musician of the ancient world. His music could move stones, tame beasts and make gods cry. When he lost his wife Eurydice (think opera) he was allowed by the gods to go into Hades to retrieve her, on condition that he not look back as he brought her out. Well, you know all about that “don’t look back” thing. He did, she went back to Hades, he went mad and got torn apart by wild women. So that’s the theme. Loss, redemption, music, art. Think chandeliers with hearts of stones in ice that melt slowly and drop on gongs and strings. Orpheus was not only a gifted musician but the son of Calliope, the muse of music.

The show is going to be very environmental, mostly lit by candles and a few spotlights here and there for effect highlighting. Classical busts made from twisted wire and found objects and paintings that are part biography, part history and part fantasy. Think underworld, Cerberus and shades of the past. Souls in mirrors and the ghosts of dead artists. At my age I can run with the theme and have fun with it. I do hope that you will attend. Dress to impress, and bring a designated driver…. it’s that type of event. I have stayed here in North Carolina for a reason, against the advice of art dealers, friends and investors. It would be lovely to see you at my exhibition!
TIME FOR POLITICIANS TO STOP “ACTING UGLY”

The Saturday before the General Election, I was standing beside my car at Lowe’s when I heard a loud voice across the way. “Hey, you in the Ford 500!” I was startled, and when I turned to look, the fellow shot me a bird. “What was that about?” I thought. It took a moment until I had the “ah ha” moment. My bumper sticker. He didn’t agree with my choice for President.

My skin is pretty thick. I forgot about this rude encounter until after the election when a neighbor commented on how nasty and personal the whole mess had gotten before voters mercifully put an end to the process. “Maybe we should all peel off our bumper stickers now and just be Americans again,” she suggested. “Good idea,” I responded, and walked over to my car and removed mine. The newfangled vinyl ones come right off. Old paper bumper stickers required lots of soap and hot water — perhaps a razor blade — and even then you could get stuck with the reminder of a bad choice until your old heap went to the junkyard.

A few days passed and I saw a former member of the U.S. Senate being interviewed on TV. I don’t remember the name or party, and it doesn’t matter. The reporter asked what accounts for the nastiness on Capitol Hill, the inability to work together or compromise, and often the personal tone of rhetoric — in short, the appalling lack of civility. His reply surprised me. It was so logical.

In essence he said members of Congress don’t know each other anymore. It used to be, he said, that they brought their families to Washington and had homes there. Their spouses knew each other and attended events together. There were cookouts and kids played together and often went to school together. Members had some down time to know each other on a one-on-one basis. We were friends, he said. And he added that it is awfully hard to say mean and vindictive things about someone you know and may be having dinner with over the weekend. Maybe we can sum up what he said as, “Familiarity breeds civility.”

As far as I know, no members of the North Carolina Congressional delegation have families in D.C. The usual drill is to fly up Monday and come home Thursday afternoon or Friday morning. Wikipedia is a better source of information about a member than a Senator who sits beside him or her in the hallowed chamber. And if you want to question the motives — even patriotism — of seat mates and call them scoundrels, there is no personal price to pay.

Let’s suppose you live down east and are a member of a local volunteer fire department. You fight fires with your neighbors. You barbecue chickens for fundraisers together and your families gather and make fruit baskets for shut-ins at Christmas. You attend the same church and your kids play sports together. There is little chance you are going to get your dander up stand in the town square and call your fellow firefighter nasty names if you disagree on something.

I am reminded of the Will Rogers quote, “I’ve never met a man I didn’t like.” I have to say that I don’t agree totally with that statement, but generally it’s true. If you get to know someone and understand where they are coming from, it is much more difficult to dislike them.

I can testify to the fact that the enmity and lack of public civility under the Capitol dome has not always been at this level. When I went to work in the Senate in the mid-seventies, Republicans and Democrats of widely divergent viewpoints could still disagree and remain civil. I think of Strom Thurmond, an ideologue who changed parties when he could no longer live with what he perceived at the Democratic Party’s agenda. Thurmond was an aggressive debater and tenacious when he had a point to pursue. But he respected his colleagues. When he referred to a fellow Senator on the Senate floor as “my distinguished colleague,” in his mind, they were just that.

A group from Wayne County came to D.C. and cooked some pigs for a fundraiser we held. My boss, Robert Morgan, a Democrat, told Senator Thurmond over on the Senate floor that the guys were coming and invited him to join us for some eastern North Carolina barbecue. Thurmond came and ate a couple of heaping plates as he visited with our folks from home. I bet some of them still remember their visit with the Senator.

Senator Jennings Randolph, a New Deal Democrat from West Virginia and a long way from Thurmond politically, was still his friend. When Vivadelle Holmes, the gracious African-American lady who ran the Senator’s dining room decided to marry, the two of them teamed up and sponsored her wedding, sending out invitations under both of their names. Senators from both sides of the aisle attended.

There are other examples of friendships across party lines. Observers could never understand the close working relationship and genuine friendship between Senator Ted Kennedy, a liberal Democrat, and Senator Orrin Hatch, a conservative senator from Utah. While there was much they disagreed on, they nevertheless collaborated on meaningful legislation over the years. Now “collaboration” is viewed with disdain.

Friendships extended to the staff level. I organized and chaired the bipartisan Southern Association of Administrative Assistants (Chiefs of Staff). We met once a month for lunch and developed close working relationships. Staffers, Republicans and Democrats, could have breakfast together in the Senate cafeteria, garner co-sponsors for legislation across party lines, and work out differences throughout the day on legislative matters without the least hint of acrimony. We followed the lead of our bosses, who valued civility.

It was not always peace and light, but my point is that it does not have to be as it is today. It used to be said that politics is the art of compromise. Today it seems that politics is more about intractability. Strength and stubbornness have become commonplace. Meanness has become a virtue.

It was ironic that I checked the news when writing this and saw that Warren Rudman, the former Senator from New Hampshire, had died. I knew him when he was Attorney General of his state and gave him a little help in organizing his office when he came to Washington. He was a practical politician — what one might call a moderate Republican today. Here is what Senator John McCain, who is cut from some of the same cloth, had to say about his passing:

“Warren's fierce independence and commitment to always placing the national interest over political expediency set a high standard and served as an inspiration to a generation of public servants, especially me.”

“As a Senator, Warren worked with everyone, and was respected by everyone, both Republicans and Democrats,” McCain added. “He repeatedly reached across the aisle to address America's greatest challenges.”

Warren Rudman, an impatient person by nature, left the Senate after two terms because he was frustrated with the process. Bill Clinton, a Democrat, asked Rudman, a Republican, to serve as his Secretary of the Treasury. Rudman declined. He devoted the rest of his life to bipartisan efforts to deal with our most compelling national concerns, especially fiscal policy.

Civility does not have to be an outdated concept. Compromise does not have to be viewed as a sign of weakness. If my mother were around she probably would say, “It's time for that crowd in Washington to quit acting ugly.”

I ask, “Whatever happened to good will toward men?” Between you and me, I think voters are going to have very little tolerance for the same old antics and enmity in the New Year.

The Triangle’s finest came out to “give cancer the boot” at the 2012 Raleigh Roundup in November, benefitting the American Cancer Society of Raleigh at the Kerr Scott Pavilion at the North Carolina State Fairgrounds. Patrons enjoyed music, dancing, live and silent auctions and a Chef’s Challenge which brought out some of the Triangle’s top culinary talent.

The winner of this year’s people’s choice for “Best Dish at the Raleigh Roundup” went to Corbett Monica, Executive Chef at Bella Monica restaurant. His decadent ravioli was prepared with fresh North Carolina pumpkin, pancetta, shiitake mushrooms and parmigiano reggiano crema. “This is actually a dish we have been playing with for a few years at Bella Monica,” he says. “It has always been popular and originally was only on the menu from October through Thanksgiving. Each year it stays on the menu longer and longer into winter.”

Originally from central New Jersey, Monica hails from a large Italian family, and it was his grandmother who first introduced him to the fine art of cooking. But he always aspired to be a restaurant owner, and today he has expanded the Bella Monica Brand to include the Bella Monica Flatbread Company, a wholesale business that sells gluten-free pizzas to supermarkets throughout the county.
Monica describes his cooking philosophy as clean, simple, honest and full flavored, but not overly complex. “The key element to many things, cooking included, is balance,” he says. “I fully support the local movement. We are glad and proud to support our farmers, like Nooherooka and Heritage Farms, as I truly believe their products will create healthier people.”

And if his winning dish at the Raleigh Roundup is any indication, Monica certainly knows how to make an impression with his culinary talents. “The best part of the evening is working with all of our chef buddies and restaurant friends helping to raise funds for cancer research and to support and honor those family members, neighbors and friends of friends who have lost their battles and lives to cancer,” he says. “It’s such a powerful enemy that affects each of us in some way. The Roundup is a fun concept (who doesn’t like cowboys and cowgirls?) and the supporters are fun, kind folks from our collective neighborhoods. I’m proud to be a part of Raleigh Roundup and to support it.”

I'm no prude, but I can't refrain from commenting that sex has been rearing its ugly head with relentless regularity lately. What used to be referred to as moral decay has accelerated to a commonplace in public life. Suetonius, who wrote The Twelve Caesars profiling Imperial Rome's early leaders, would blush if he were around today. Not even Caligula's alleged exploits match the episodes of indiscretion reported today.

The fall of David Petraeus is the scandal du jour, owing to his majestic reputation as one of the most successful generals of our era, as well as serving as Director of the CIA. His indiscretions with his female biographer are a permanent stain on the honor of the Army, and an intolerable breach of national security. The US Armed Services are humiliated and our intelligence corps belittled.

But right here in the Raleigh area there is enough to go around to make the point that lascivious behavior appears to be the rule, not the exception. The male chief of staff of the Republican Speaker of the NC House was openly making whoopee with a female lobbyist in the halls of the Legislature. Nearby, a Democrat Party official was canned for unwanted homosexual advances to an office worker. The alleged love entanglements of two members of the dysfunctional Wake County School Board remain unclear, but for sure sex was an issue for one or the other.

Suetonius would be astounded at the incredulous serial victimization of young boys by football coach Jerry Sandusky, and the attacks on young girls by super-star British television actor Jimmy Saville. And he simply would not believe the Roman Catholic Church covered up thousands of acts of sexual predation against young boys by priests who exploited their positions of trust and authority to lure their prey.

The march of scandal obscures the antics of former US Senator John Edwards. President Bill Clinton's outrageous behavior in the Oval Office with intern Monica Lewinsky no longer elicits outrage. And routine reports disclose sexual predation in area schools in a social environment dominated by the Internet, which provides a stage for debauchery of young children.

When you are caught up in dramatic events, it's difficult to gain perspective. Are these incidents, and our response to them, adding up to the end of civilization? To say this behavior has always gone on, but now the 24-hour cycle brings it to our attention, cannot be accurate. Certainly, sex has caused problems since the dawn of human existence - but not at the current volume.

We point to Caligula as an example of the impending doom of Rome. Should we not be cognizant that the increase in licentious behavior we see in the news today is a sign of decline? Or will we just wake up one day and the end is here. This revolution will be televised (homage here to Gil Scot Heron), brought to you by Viagra, Cialis and featuring nearly-nude teenage girls, program scripts featuring group sex, orgasms and adultery. Hey, that's all on TV tonight.

NOTES FROM LA-LA LAND

Every winter we hear from our Northern friends that Southerners can't drive in the snow. But we know how to endure a hurricane with grace and courtesy, qualities rarely witnessed during Super Storm Sandy that hit New Jersey and New York. Big Apple mayor Michael Bloomberg, whose dictatorial edicts to improve society by trampling over individual rights are reminiscent of Benito Mussolini, refused to cancel the New York Marathon - for fear of losing $300 million in visitor revenue - until the very last moment. Runners and visitors did not have enough notice to cancel, so hotels doubled room rates.

The Nobel crowd has been veering towards lunacy in their choice for the Peace Prize for some years now. Yasser Arafat, a Soviet paid terrorist, comes to mind. But bestowing the once prestigious award to the European Union goes too far.

The enterprise is teetering on collapse as its idealistic theories of economic security are not working. Greece and Spain are basically in receivership, presided over by Community central bankers who have created a sovereign debtor's prison to punish their profligate ways for fear they may take down the entire EU edifice.

The EU is a throwback to socialist, collective theories that went out with the collapse of the USSR. Members are required to subsume their unique identities (and currencies) to an utopian scheme that can't work in the long run. Economic fissures are already weakening the foundation, validating the decision of the UK and six other members to keep their own currency and not sign the EU Constitution, an unwieldy and loquacious screed that reads like the Communist Manifesto. Maybe the Nobel committee figured they should go ahead and give them the Peace Prize while the EU is still there.

The news agenda has become a soundtrack of divisive politics, dim economic news, murder and sexual scandal, punctuated fort nightly with a mass killing somewhere in America, almost always by some disturbed mentally ill patient set amongst us by the psychiatric profession in the name of the rights of the victimized. But I never imagined circumcision would make the headlines.

A town in Germany has outlawed the ritual, influenced by activists who maintain the ancient practice is a form of mutilation, a fierce cause of the global do-gooders who combat female circumcision in non-modern societies. Of course female circumcision is abhorrent, but the male version is necessary for health reasons and is practiced by Jews and Christians worldwide.
